

A HAND-BOOK OF HINDU RELIGION

155
2-86

Aceno

623

TIRUMALA-TIRUPATI DEVASTHANAMS
TIRUPATI
1986

T.T.D. Religious Publication Series No. 294

A HAND-BOOK OF HINDU RELIGION

Copies: 5,000

Price:

Published by:

Sri S. Lakshminarayana, I.A.S.,

Executive Officer,

T.T. Devasthanams,

Tirupati.

Printed at:

T.T. Devasthanams Press,

Tirupati.

Aceno
623

CONTENTS

	Page.
Preface	... iii
Invocatory verses	... v
Contents	... xiv
Chapter I: Introduction	... 1
„ II: God	... 9
„ III: Jiva	... 18
„ IV: Prakṛti	... 26
„ V: Darśanas	... 29
„ VI: Literature	... 45
„ VII: Varṇas and Āśramas	... 62
„ VIII: Worship	... 80
„ IX: Sādhana	... 88
„ X: Puruṣārthas	... 96
„ XI: Religion and Society	... 102
„ XII: Conclusion	... 118
Appendix: Illustrative stories	... 121
Index	... 122

PREFACE

The Tirumala-Tirupati Devasthanams Committee, intending to publish a Handbook of Hindu Religion for the benefit of the public and the students of the Summer School of Hindu Religion, appointed a Committee to take steps for the preparation of the book. The Committee approved the synopsis of the book prepared by the Director of the Oriental Institute and appointed a sub-committee consisting of Profs. P. N. Srinivasachari, P. V. Ramanujasvami and K. C. Varadachari to draft the Handbook. The present book is the result of the combined labours of the three scholars named above. The Committee will consider its effort amply rewarded if the Handbook serves to inculcate the main tenets of our religion upon the minds of the readers.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

It is indeed a great pleasure for the T. T. Devasthanams to resume the publication and dissemination of religious literature after a period of long silence. As all of us know, our Vedic literature coupled with ritualistic and conventional procedures has been our back-bone and part of our national life from times immemorial. But, of late, this type of revered approach towards our religious treasures, has been disappearing slowly, giving way to many fissiparous and antinational tendencies, due to various reasons and influences obviously known to us.

In these days of rocket speed degradation of national character any attempt which helps to make the people think about our religions would be the most appreciable factor in the path of religious uplift. Having this in mind the T. T. Devasthanams has again taken up the printing of books on our religion and perhaps this second edition of 'Hand Book of Hindu Religion' is the beginning on that path.

With regards to the contents, nothing has been added by us, as the first edition itself was planned and carried out in such a way and style easily understandable to the moderately educated devotee. This book is concised but complete by itself in dealing with all aspects of Hindu Religion in a birds eye view.

The Tirumala Tirupati Devasthanam would feel much elated, if this booklet is patronised by all the Asthikas of the Country.

EXECUTIVE OFFICER,

T. T. D., TIRUPATI.

श्रीमते रामानुजाय नमः

प्रार्थनाश्लोकाः

★ ★ ★

अखिलभुवनजन्मस्थेमभङ्गादिलीले

विनतविविधभूतत्रातरक्षैकदीक्षे ।

श्रुतिशिरसि विदीप्ते ब्रह्मणि श्रीनिवासे

भवतु मम परस्मिन् शेमुषी भक्तिरूपा ॥

श्रीभाष्यम्—श्रीभगवद्रामानुजाचार्याः

समस्तजननीं वन्दे चैतन्यस्तन्यदायिनीम् ।

श्रेयसीं श्रीनिवासस्य करुणामिव रूपिणीम् ॥

दयाशतकम्—श्रीमद्वेदान्तदेशिकाः

ईशानां जगतोऽस्य वैकटपतेः विष्णोः परां प्रेयसीं

तद्वक्षस्थलनित्यवासरसिकां तत्क्षान्तिसंवर्धिनीम् ।

पद्मालंकृतपाणिपल्लवयुगां पद्मासनस्थां श्रियं

वात्सल्यादिगुणोज्ज्वलां भगवतीं वन्दे जगन्मातरम् ॥

श्रीस्तुतिः—श्रीमद्वेदान्तदेशिकाः

श्रीभूमिनायक दयादिगुणामृताब्धे

देवाधिदेव जगदेकशरण्यमूर्ते ।

श्रीमन्ननन्तगरुडादिभिरर्चिताङ्घ्रे

श्रीवैकटाचलपते तव सुप्रभातम् ॥

श्रीवेङ्कटेशसुप्रभातम्—श्रीवादिभीकरमहागुरुः

अधिवेकटशैलमुदारमतेः

जनताभिमतधिकदानरतात्

परदेवतया गदितान्निगमैः

कमलादयितान्न परं कलये ॥

श्रीवेङ्कटेशस्तोत्रम्—श्रीवादिभीकरमहागुरुः

पार्थाय तत्सदृशसारथिना त्वयैव

यौ दर्शितौ स्वचरणौ शरणं व्रजेति ।

भूयोऽपि मद्यमिह तौ करदर्शितौ ते

श्रीवेकटेशचरणौ शरणं प्रपद्ये ॥

श्रीवेङ्कटेशप्रपत्तिः—श्रीवादिभीकरमहागुरुः

विना वेकटेशं न नाथो न नाथः

सदा वेकटेशं स्मरामि स्मरामि ।

हरे वेकटेशं प्रसीद प्रसीद

प्रियं वेकटेशं प्रयच्छ प्रयच्छ ॥

श्रीवेङ्कटेशस्तोत्रम्—श्रीवादिभीकरमहागुरुः

सर्वावयवसौन्दर्यसंपदा सर्वचेतसाम् ।

सदा संमोहनायास्तु वेकटेशाय मङ्गलम् ॥

श्रीवेङ्कटेशमङ्गलाशासनम्—श्रीवादिभीकरमहागुरुः

ప్రార్థన పద్యములు

ఉ॥ శ్రీవసుధాకళత ! యతసీసుమనోతిమనోజ్ఞగ్రత ! మా
యావిహిత త్రిలోక ! నిగమార్థవివేకవిపాక ! భవ్యసం
సేవకసౌమ్యమానసవశీకృతరూప ! భవాంధకార ని
ర్దావనదీప ! దీప్తనవతామరసేక్షణ ! విశ్వరక్షణా !

నృసింహపురాణము—ఎఱ్ఱా పెగ్గడ.

శా॥ విన్నంజాలు భవన్నహత్వము, భవద్విజ్ఞాన సద్గోష్ఠిలో
నున్నంజాలు, భవత్పదాంబురుహసేవోత్సాహసంపన్నులం
గన్నంజాలు, భవత్సమంచిత జగత్కల్యాణ నామంబుఁ జే
ర్కొన్నంజాలు, నరుండు శాశ్వతశుభారూఢుండు లక్ష్మీశ్వరా !

నృసింహపురాణము—ఎఱ్ఱా పెగ్గడ

సీ॥ వినతుల కొనఁగఁ దాల్చిన శాంతరస మన
నడుగులఁ గటకహారాంశు లమరఁ
గటి నిడ్డ కేల్దమ్మిఁ గడు రాలి క్రమ్ము పు
ప్పాడి వోలఁ బసిఁడివచ్చడము దనర
నార్తుల కిదియ దిక్కుని తన పాదద్వ
యము చూపుగతి వరహస్త మమరఁ
గడు దయాదృష్టిఁ దెల్పెడు తటిల్ల తరీతి
హృదయస్థలిని లక్ష్మి యింపు నెఱవ

గీ॥ నాననేందుసుధాధార లనఁగఁ దార
హార వల్లులు నురమున నలరుచుండఁ
జారు మకుటాభిశోభియు శంఖచక్ర
హృద్యపార్శ్వండు మా వేంకటేశ్వరుండు.

పరమయోగినిలాసము—సేదీరాజ తిమ్మరాజు.

చ॥ ఇతఁ డలమేలుమంగవిభుఁ, డీతఁడెవో కలశాబ్దికన్యకుఁ
సతతముఁ జిత్త మిచ్చిన రసజ్ఞుఁడు, ప్రాజ్ఞుఁడు సర్వవైభవో
న్నతుఁడు రమాసతీప్రియుఁడు నందకశార్ఙ్గధరుం డటంచు ని
న్నతివలు మెచ్చి మెచ్చి కొనియాడుదు రెప్పుడు వేంకటేశ్వరా!

శ్రీ వేంకటేశ్వర శతకము—తాళ్ళపాక అన్నమాచార్యులు

ఉ॥ యోగ్యతలేని కమ్మఁడ నయోగ్యుఁడ నన్నిటఁ జూడ గర్భ ని
ర్భాగ్యుఁడ నీకృపామతికిఁ బ్రాప్తుఁడ నోయలమేలుమంగ నీ
చూచుకృపానిరీక్షణమె చూచెదనంచును నీ ప్రియాంగనఁ
బూచిన వాక్రస్థనానములఁ బూజలు చేసెద వేంకటేశ్వరా!

శ్రీ వేంకటేశ్వర శతకము—తాళ్ళపాక అన్నమాచార్యులు.

సీ॥ సర్వేశ! సర్వాత్మ! సర్వగుణాతీత!
సర్వజనావన! సదయహృదయ!
గోపాల! గోపాలగోపనధారేయ!
గో గోప గోపికా భాగధేయ!
వారణదైన్యనివారణ! వారణ
శిక్షణదక్షిణ! సింహశౌర్య!
శేషాచలేశ! యశేషలోకనివేశ!
శేషశరీర విశేషతల్ప!

గీ॥ నీలనీరదనీరధినీలగాత్ర !

తీర్థ తీర్థ మహాతీర్థ తీర్థపాద !

నందనందన ! ననకననందన నుత !

శరణు శరణయ్య శరణార్థి శరణ ! శరణు.

వెంకటాచల విలాసము.

ఉ॥ ఏమి తపంబొనర్చితిమొ యే సుకృతం బొనరించినామొ యే

నోములు నోచినారమొ మనోరథముల్ మది దేటువారగా

కామితదానపాటవము గల్గిన తండ్రిని వెంకటాచల

స్వామిని చూడగంటిమి శుభములుగూడ నఘమ్ము లూడగ॥.

వెంకటాచల విలాసము.

సీ॥ అతులితోన్నత తిరుపతి పరిపాలన

విభవోన్నతుండవై వెలసికాక

యేరిని నేరువు నేరంబు లెంచక

నుభయలోక సుఖంబు లొనగ్గికాక

మహిమ యలర్మేలుమంగ యిల్లాలుగా

మును నోచు పుణ్యవాసనను గాక

చేదోడువాదోడునై దయ నెవరు పి

ల్పినతోడ మాటలాడననె గాక

గీ॥ దేవుడ నటన్న నూఱక తీటునెట్లు

చెల్లెబో నీకు నొకనికిఁ జెల్లుగాక

తండ్రి వీ వలమేల్మంగ తల్లి మాకు

జలజహితధామ వెంకటశ్రీలధామ.

ప్రబంధరాజ విజయ వేంకటేశ్వర విలాసము—గణపరపు వేంకటకవి.

సీ॥ అఖిల విశ్వమున కేకాధార మర్చావ
 తారమ్ము తా నౌట తథ్యమగును,
 అఖిలమై యాదిమధ్యంతముల్ తోగొన్న
 నిత్యంబు తా నౌట సత్యమగును,
 అఖిలపూర్ణము సచ్చిదానందమయము నా
 రాయణార్థకము తా నగుట నిజము,
 అఖిలజీవుల కాయురారోగ్యభాగ్యప్ర
 దాత తా నౌట యథార్థ మగును,

గీ॥ అఖిల మయి పొల్చు తన కల్మి నరయ నఖిల;
 మఖిలము ఖిలమై తనకల్మి నరయకున్న;
 నెవ్వ డవ్వాడ వీవె రావే, భయార్తు
 నాదుకోవె! వేంకటనాథ! చేదుకోవె!

శ్రీ వేటూరి ప్రభాకరశాస్త్రి.

క॥ మంగళ మలమేల్మంగళకు
 మంగళ మలమేలుమంగ మగనికి నని మీ
 మంగళ మేమట మెద సమ
 రాంగణనిస్సేమ! వేంకటాచలధామా!

వేంకటాచలధామతారావళి—ధర్మపురి వెంకటశాస్త్రి.

ஸ்ரீ வேங்கடேஸ்வர ஸ்தோத்திரங்கள்

காப்பு

பல்லாண்டு பல்லாண்டு பல்லாயிரத் தாண்டு
பலகோடி நூறாயிரம்
மல்லாண்ட திண்தோள் மணிவண்ணா! உன்
சேவடி செவ்வி திருக்காப்பு.

உளன்கண்டாய் நன்னெஞ்சே! உத்தம நென்றும்
உளன்கண்டாய் உள்ளுவா ருள்ளத்து—உளன்கண்டாய்
வெள்ளத்தி னுள்ளானும் வேங்கடத்து மேயானும்
உள்ளத்தி னுள்ளானென்று ஓர்.

—பொய்கையாழ்வார்.

போதறிந்து வானரங்கள் பூஞ்சுனைபுக்கு ஆங்கலர்ந்த
போதறிந்து கொண்டேத்தும் போதுஉள்ளம்! —போது
மணிவேங்கடவன் மலரடிக்கே செல்ல
அணிவேங் கடவன்பே ராய்ந்து.

—பூதத்தாழ்வார்.

தாழ்சடையும் நீள்முடியும் ஒள்மழுவும் சக்கரமும்
சூழரவும் பொன்னாணும் தோன்றுமால்—சூழும்
திரண்டருவி பாயும் திருமலைமே லெந்தைக்கு
இரண்டுருவு மொன்றாய் இசைந்து.

—பேயாழ்வார்.

வேங்கடமே விண்ணோர் தொழுவதுவும் மெய்ம்மையால்
வேங்கடமே மெய்வினேநோய் தீர்ப்பதுவும்—வேங்கடமே
தானவரை வீழ்த்தன் குழிப் படைதொட்டு
வானவரைக் காப்பான் மலை.

—திருமழிசையாழ்வார்.

ஒழிவில்காலமெல்லாம் உடனாய்மன்னி
வழுவினா அடிமை செய்யவேண்டும்நாம்
தெழிகுரலருவித் திருவேங்கடத்து
எழில்கொள்சோதி எந்தைதந்தை தந்தைக்கே.

அகலகில்லேன் இறையுமென்று அலர்மேல் மங்கையுறை மார்பா!
நிகரில்புகழாய்! உலகம்முன்றுடையாய்! என்னையாள் வானே!
நிகரி லமரர் முனிக்கணங்கள் விரும்பும் திருவேங் கடத்தானே!
புகலொன் றில்லாஅடியேன்உன்னடிக்கீழ் அமர்ந்துபுகுந்தேனே.

—ஸ்ரீ நம்மாழ்வார்.

சென்னியோங்கு தன்திருவேங்கடமுடையாய்! உலகுகொண்டு
தன்னைவாழநின்றநம்பி! தாமோதரா! சதிரா!
என்னையும்என்னுடைமையையும் உன்சக்கரப்பொறியொற்றி
நின்னருளே புரிந்திருந்தேன் இனிஎன் திருக்குறிப்பே?

—பெரியாழ்வார்.

ஒளிவண்ணம் வளைசிந்தை உறக்கத்தோடு இவையெல்லாம்
எளிமையால் இட்டு என்னை ஈடழியப் போயினவால்
குளிரருவி வேங்கடத்து என் கோவிந்தன் குணம்பாடி
அளியத்த மேகங்கள்! ஆவிகாத் திருப்பேனே.

—ஸ்ரீ ஆண்டாள்.

செடியாய வல்வினைகள் தீர்க்கும் திருமாலே!
 நெடியானே! வேங்கடவா! நின்கோயி லின்வாசல்
 அடியாரும் வானவரும் அரம்பையரும் கிடந்தியங்கும்
 படியாய்க் கிடந்துஉன் பவளவாய் காண்பேனே.

—குலசேகராழ்வார்.

மந்திபாய் வடவேங்கடமாமலை வானவர்கள்
 சந்திசெய்யநின்றான் அரங்கத்தரவினணையான்
 அந்திபோல் நிறத்தாடையும் அதன்மேலயனைப் படைத்த
 உந்திமேலதன்றோ அடியேனுள்ளத்தின்னுயிரே. [தோரெழில்

—திருப்பாணாழ்வார்.

குலந்தா னெத்தனையும் பிறந்தேயிறந் தெய்த்தொழிந்தேன்
 நலந்தா னென்றுமிலேன் நல்லதோரறம் செய்துமிலேன்
 நிலந்தோய் நீள்முகிச்சேர் நெறியார் திருவேங்கடவா!
 அலந்தேன் வந்தடைந்தேன் அடியேனை ஆட்கொண்டருளே.

—திருமங்கையாழ்வார்.

கண்ணனடி யினையெமக்குக் காட்டும் வெற்பு
 கடுவினைய ரிருவினையும் கடியும் வெற்பு
 திண்ணமிது வீடென்னத் திகழும் வெற்பு
 தெளிந்தபெருந் தீர்த்தங்கள் செறிந்த வெற்பு
 புண்ணியத்தின் புகலிதென்னப் புகழும் வெற்பு
 பொன்னுலகில் போகமெல்லாம் புணர்க்கும் வெற்பு
 விண்ணவரும் மண்ணவரும் விரும்பும் வெற்பு
 வேங்கடவெற் பெனவிளங்கும் வேத வேற்பே.

—ஸ்ரீமந் நிகமாந்த மஹாதேசிகன்.

ஆழ்வார் திருவடிகளே சரணம்.

A Hand-Book of Hindu Religion

★ ★ ★

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION.

Hinduism is one of the most important of living religions in the world; it is the oldest of all and is called Sanātana Dharma. No study of religion can be complete without taking its finest and highest forms as revealed in its sacred scriptures and as interpreted by its leading exponents and realised by its seers, sages and saints. Hinduism in a sense supplies the fullest material for the study of religion and can claim to be the one religion which is most comprehensive and universal.

It is not a historical religion, but it is a religion without any historic founders and it has eternal foundation. Historical religions base their doctrines and dogmas on the revelations of their prophets. Hinduism is based on the Vedas, the eternal scriptures revealed to the seers and sages and testified to by the Smritis and transmitted in an unbroken tradition. The Veda is the word of God and is God Himself and is therefore eternal or nitya. It is apauruṣeya, impersonal, not man-made. Hinduism is sanātana religion without beginning and end and is one continuous revelation consisting of the Veda, Vedāṅgas, Smṛtis, Itihāsas, Purānas, Āgamas, and the hymns of the Ālvārs and the Nāyanmārs. It deals with eternal spiritual truths adopted to changing conditions and is therefore fixed in essentials and flexible in non-essentials like rites and rituals.

The term Hinduism is of foreign origin and vague. The term Sanātana Dharma is therefore preferable to it and it has a rounded perfection and is comprehensive; but the name Hinduism is sanctioned by usage. Dharma applies to righteousness exemplified in practical life, individual and social, and implies also mokṣa-dharma or the nature of freedom from the ills of life or samsāra. It is thus a way of life and a view of life and includes both theory and practice. The Veda is the chief authority or pramāṇa for Hinduism, and as aids to its practical understanding are the other scriptures like the Smṛtis. There are four Vedas, the Rg-veda, the Yajurveda, the Sāmaveda and the Atharvaveda. Each Veda has three divisions, namely the Mantra, the Brāhmaṇa and the Upaniṣad. One who knows the inner meaning of the Mantras and the Brāhmaṇas is a Mantra-dṛk, who acquires mastery over nature, internal and external. It is wrong to say that the Vedas belong to the child stage of humanity. An ancient Vedic text which says that the Sat or God is one and the seers call it variously contains the keynote of Hinduism and its universality. The Upaniṣads or the Vedānta are the most sublime teachings of Hinduism and are called Brahma vidyā, containing the wisdom of Brahman, by knowing which everything is known. They are the solace of life and death. Vedic knowledge is summed up in the Vedāntic wisdom of Brahman enshrined in the Praṇava or Aum. Though the Vedas refer to the economical and ethical (the hedonistic) ends of life, the highest end is mokṣa or the realisation of Brahman. It is therefore called Brahmavidyā. The Veda cannot be known without aids or aṅgas and there are six aids like phonetics, grammar and astronomy.

The Smṛtis like those of Manu bring out the ethics of the Hindus in their individual and social aspects. They deal more with duties and virtues than with rights or privileges. There are cardinal virtues like truth and ahimsā which are universally applicable and also relative duties or yuga-dharmas which exist only in certain periods. The Smṛti of sage Parāśara is meant for this age of Kali. The two Itihāsas, the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata describe the two avatāras of Viṣṇu, Śrī Rāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. God incarnates into history at critical periods to restore righteousness and punish wickedness. Even such punishment is ultimately only for the reformation of the wicked man. There are eighteen Purāṇas of which the chief are the Viṣṇupurāṇa and the Bhāgavata. They are chiefly cosmic accounts dealing with the origin, the preservation and the destruction of the Universe. Their chief aim is to bring out the increasing purpose of God as rakṣaka or the maker of muktas. The Āgamas explain the way in which God comes down to the world of man in the form of arcā or idol in order to redeem him from his sinfulness. The hymns of the Nāyanmārs and the Āḷvārs are mainly sung in praise of arcā or idol in the temple for the bestowal of His redemptive grace.

The study of the Vedas, the Smṛtis, the Itihāsas, the Purāṇas, the Āgamas and the experiences of the Āḷvārs and the Nāyanmārs reveal the inner truth of religion, viz., the gradual descent of God to the human level to lift him up to the Divine level. The Brahman of the Vedas becomes the antaryāmin of the Vedānta, the Īśvara of the Smṛtis and the Purāṇas, the Avatāra of the Itihāsas and the arcā of the Āgamas, Āḷvars and Nāyanmārs. With God's grace man ascends from the animal and human stages through the spiritual stages to the divine stage of mukti. Thus all the scriptures have a unity of spiritual purpose suited to different types and persons.

Hinduism as Vedānta expounds this unity of import in a philosophic way. The six Darśanas or systems of philosophy were composed by different ṛṣis with one single aim, namely, the removal of the ills of life to the attainment of mokṣa. Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika deals with the logic or pramāṇas and their categories of life. The Sāṅkhya-Yoga deals with puruṣa and prakṛti and the way in which the puruṣa frees himself from prakṛti. Pūrva-mīmāṃsā stresses the ethics of dharma. Uttara-mīmāṃsā of the Vedānta is the supreme philosophy of Brahman by knowing whom everything is known.

Each of these systems helps the mumukṣu or the seeker after Brahman to attain viveka, vairāgya and ethical purity respectively as essential steps to the attainment of Brahman.

The pramāṇas prove that Brahman is the highest object of knowledge. They affirm the reality of the supreme puruṣa. The highest dharma consists in attaining Him. This is the way of Vedānta as taught in the Upaniṣads, the Gītā and the Brahmasūtras which are called the three prasthānas. The Upaniṣads describe the direct experience of God by the Ṛṣis; the Gītā is the essence of the Upaniṣads and the Sūtras expound their philosophy.

The term darśana brings out the comprehensiveness of the Sanātana Dharma or Vedānta. Darśana ordinarily applies to knowledge gained through the senses or pratyakṣa as in the example, "This rose is red." It is real and not illusory though it is particular and fleeting. The knowledge gained through reason or anumāna is more stable as it gives us some insight into the universal laws which explain the particular facts given in sense-perception. It is thus darśana in the sense of reasoning, as in the example, "The Earth goes round the Sun, because it is a planet." Higher than inference is intuition or direct knowledge of God or Brahman, as in the experience of mystics like Nammālvār. It is Brahmadarśana and is the supreme end of knowledge. Thus darśana is going from the physical sense organ to the inner eye of reason and finally to Brahmacakṣus or the direct realisation of Brahman. In this way knowledge leads to the more of itself; it grows from sense-perception or pratyakṣa to reasoning or anumāna. Reasoning develops into direct realisation of Brahman as given in Sāstra. All these three ways are inter-connected and complementary and there is no contradiction in their relation. Veda is not blind faith as it is a spiritual verity verified by the Rṣis and other seers of God. The best test of Vedic knowledge is in our direct intuition of God with the guidance of the Guru who has seen Him face to face. In this way darśana as sense-knowledge becomes darsana or seeing with the inner eye of reason and finally as direct Brahma-darśana or experience of God by the Rṣis and other seers of God. Thus the term darśana applied to Hinduism is all-inclusive. It accepts the reality of matter or the world of nature as described by science, but rejects materialism as the final view of life. It accepts the importance of reason but rejects rationalism as the final view of life. It accepts the importance of scripture or śāstra but rejects theology as blind faith. Hinduism gives a place to science, philosophy, and theology and reconciles them. It says that the best proof of the existence of God is the experience of God.

Hinduism is not a personal religion as it insists on the unity of life as a whole and the duties of each person to the other members of the society. But it does not accept the western view that God needs man's co-operation in the furtherance of His purpose. Man does his work as worship of God in the spirit of kainkarya in utter humility. Every act of social service is really the adoration of God as the inner self in all beings. There is no spiritual barrier between one Jiva and another.

Hinduism is thus coherent, synthetic and universal. It is coherent because it satisfies every Pramāṇa and sees no dividing line between reason and revelation. It is synthetic because it gives a place to every system of thought and every school of Vedānta. It is also tolerant because it recognises sects though it rejects sectarianism. It is universal because it affirms the truth that every man is a son of God and he can intuit Him directly. But it is not a mere hotch-potch or eclectic faith. It provides for different types of people but at the same time emphatically declares that the goal or aim is the same. Every one is ātman or spiritual, and there is one ātman in and beyond all; and every one can realise Him. The terms applied to Hinduism like Sanātana Dharma, Vedānta or Darśana and Brahmavidyā are all synonymous. They all affirm the same truths in spirituality and service.

The chief topics that are dealt with in this work relate to the three reals or tattvas, the means of attaining God, including Hindu sociology and methods of worship and the nature of the supreme puruṣārtha or mokṣa, and finally the value of Hinduism as a universal and catholic religion.

CHAPTER II

GOD

God in Hinduism is called by various names, like Brahman, Īśvara, Bhagavān and Puruṣottama and they all refer to the same Being. But many misleading views are held about His nature and qualities and they have to be corrected before the true meaning is explained. The most prevalent mistake is to say that the Hindu makes God in his own image; he worships stones, trees, animals and departed spirits and at best God is man as an excellent person. This view is absurd as it is not Nature but the God in Nature that is adored by him. Man is made in God's image and not God in man's image. It is wrong to say that the Hindu is a polytheist who worships many Gods or Devas. God or Īśvara is in all Gods as their inner ruler or Devadeva and therefore the Hindu is a monotheist who affirms that Brahman is the one without a second. Another mistake is that Hinduism is pantheistic as it holds that all is God and that God is all. God or Īśvara is in all beings as their ruler but is not equated with all beings. He is pure and perfect without any taint or imperfection. Still others say that the Hindu God is a mere abstraction or that it is nothing at all. But all Hindus are agreed that Religion is essentially faith in a personal God and the same is the highest Being of the philosopher. But the existence of God cannot be proved by reason nor is it a blind faith. Every one can see God face to face directly if he eagerly seeks Him, and then he is sought by God and blessed. Just as man seeks God, God also seeks man and saves him from sinfulness and the sense of separation. This is His redemptive purpose and it is gradually realised in five aspects or stages. Brahman is beyond and is pure and perfect and He is called Para. Then He becomes Īśvara or the Infinite who is called the creator, preserver and destroyer of the Cosmos or the Universe or Trimurti. Then He enters into the heart of all Jīvas as their inner ruler or Antaryāmin. Then on certain occasions of cosmic crisis, He incarnates into the world and these historic incarnations are called Avatāras. In the last stage, He is called Arcā or permanent incarnation of love in the form of Idols. The one increasing purpose of God in all these stages or descents is the redemption of the Jīvas from their career of sin and ignorance. The Hindu scriptures with their infinite motherly tenderness reveal the gradual purpose as Śruti, Purāṇa, Smṛti, Itihāsa and Psalms in Tamil and other vernaculars. The Upaniṣads reveal his perfect nature as Para and Antaryāmin; the Purāṇas describe His nature as Īśvara doing his threefold cosmic function. The Itihāsas describe the redemptive acts of the Avatāras. The Smṛtis expound his moral and aesthetic excellences and lastly the Psalms describe His love and easy accessibility to all persons. Brahman assumes a bewitching form of beauty so that He may attract the Jīvas and annex them to Himself. His five aspects may be briefly explained as follows: Brahman is the God of the Upaniṣads and he is pure and perfect in the world beyond. His nature cannot be explained adequately but his essential qualities are mentioned in a way as satyam, jñānam, anantam and ānandam. Brahman is sat or reality, or truth itself and is eternal and changeless unlike prakṛti. He is ever self-luminous and is more effulgent than all the Suns, Moons and Stars. He is supremely good or amala and is free from all imperfections. He is by nature blissful or ānanda and love itself. Brahman is the one without a second, though He has many qualities and His chief quality is love by which He imparts His nature to the Jīvas and makes them like Himself. The whole universe has its being in Him and He is the supreme end of our life.

Brahman in relation to the world or cosmos is called Īśvara and it is He who creates it, sustains it and destroys it. He does the three functions of śṛṣṭi, creation, sthiti, preservation and sam- hāra, destruction in the three forms of Brahma Viṣṇu and Śiva. This threefold function is described in detail in the eighteen Purāṇas of which the chief are Viṣṇupurāṇa and Bhāgavatapurāṇa. The world consists of Jīvas and Prakṛti but they are eternal and not created out of nothing. Before creation they were in a latent stage in Pralaya like the seed before it becomes the tree. In creation they are given new bodies by Brahman according to their previous karma and they get new opportunities of becoming free and perfect. In the state of sthiti they live and move in the three worlds, Earth, Svarga and lower worlds in accordance with their karma. They have freedom to make or mar themselves, and Viṣṇu the Lord, sustains them as their very life and He guides justly. Then there comes a time when the world is steeped in wickedness and sin and the Lord Śiva destroys it for the time being. The three functions are done by the same Īśvara out of his sweet and loving will and they are the aspects of the one cosmic function, namely to redeem the Jīvas from their ignorance and evil. This process goes on endlessly in a circle till all the Jīvas attain mukti.

Antarayamin.

After creating the Universe, Brahman enters into it as its inner self or antaryāmin. The universe consists of the physical world or acit or jaḍa and also the world of Jīvas, sub-human, human and celestial. Brahman pervades the whole world of acit and cit as Vāsudeva and resides in the heart of every Jiva, plant, animal, man or deva as its innerself or śarīrin. Though He is in all inanimate things and Jīvas, He is not in any way affected by their imperfections. As their inner self, He gives them life, rules them from within and they all exist for His satisfaction. But His chief purpose in dwelling in their hearts is to free them from their sinfulness and make them into His image. One chief defect pointed out by critics of Hinduism is that it is pantheistic because it says that Brahman pervades all beings and is the same as a stone, dog or dog-eater. That view is wrong because Hinduism says that God is in all beings as their inner ruler and is not identical with all beings. Inanimate things are different from Jīvas and God is different from both, and He enters into them with a view to be in intimate contact with them. As the Lord of love dwells in the heart of the Jiva or man called the lotus-heart of hṛdayakamala, the human body is extolled as the very temple of God or Brahmapuri. As the seat of Divinity, it is held sacred, not defiled as a filthy place of sin. God is love and He is in the Jiva in order that the Jiva may be made Godly.

Avatāra.

The theory of Brahman as redeemer is clearly brought out by that of Avatāra or Divine incarnation as revealed in the two Itihāsas, the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata. It is fully revealed by the author of the Bhagavad-gītā who is the highest incarnation of God. As the Lord himself says in the Gītā, He incarnates into history when virtue or dharma declines and is threatened with destruction by adharma, or vice. He comes down with a unique form of his own to punish the evil-doer and reward the virtuous man and restore the moral order of the world. The real motive of the incarnation is moral and religious as it consists in redeeming even the evil-doer from his ways of wickedness or sin and blessing the devotee or bhakta by revealing His form made of love or kṛpā. Even punishment or daṇḍana is dayākārya as its real object is to reform the offender and not repress him. Avatāra is not descent from a higher place to a lower place with a physical body. It is spiritual descent into human and even subhuman planes and is due to divine love and accessibility or saulabhya. The Itihāsas refer to ten chief avatāras of Viṣṇu of which the most important are Rāma and Kṛṣṇa. The earlier avatāras like those of the fish, the tortoise, the boar and the man-lion and the dwarf or Matsya, Kūrma, Varāha and Nara- simha and Vāmana were made on critical occasions in cosmic history to restore the cosmic, moral and spiritual order and establish the kingdom of righteousness. Rāma was born to punish the evil-doers like Rāvaṇa and establish righteous rule or Rāmarājya based on the eternal rules of dharma. The Rāmayāṇa and the Gītā refer to the avatāra as the very embodiment of Divine Love and they guarantee salvation or mukti to all Jīvas regardless of their birth and status, including even the sub-human species. The Avatāra is, therefore, extolled and adored as sarvaloka-rakṣaka or universal redeemer.

Arcā

The worship of God as arcā or vigraha made of stone, wood or copper is very popular among the Hindus as a permanent incarnation of Divine grace and love, sanctified by the hymns of the Ālvārs, Nāyanmārs and other devotees. What appears a graven image to the critic or the materialist, is to the devotee with a spiritual eye a speaking Beauty radiating life and love. The so-called idol is not an idea or ideal; an image or symbol; but is the loving, all-pervading presence of the Lord who resides permanently as arcā in response to the prayer of the bhakta. The image is only the embodiment of divine mercy and it is easily accessible to all who have eyes to see and ears to hear. The devotee seeks the Lord in a particular form as Viṣṇu, Śiva or Śakti and Divinity beyond all name and form incarnates into that form and he melts with love and is lost in the rapture of communion. The Āḷvārs sought refuge at the feet of the Lord and preferred to be a stone step at the altar of Śrīnivāsa to be trodden by the faithful to even bhakti and mukti.

Mother.

The doctrine of Motherhood is a special feature of Hinduism as it brings out the tender love and mercy that is the special mark of divine mercy. The idea of Īśvara as the almighty and the holy draws out the quality of reverence and awe around in the worshipper as an unworthy creature. The prayer to God as the father in Heaven or lokapati is based on the doctrine that every man is made in the image of God or son of God. Even this view does not fully bring out the nature of divine love and mercy and it is only the fact of the motherhood of God that appeals to mercy and love as the very heart of creation. God as ruler or law giver metes out justice to every one according to the strict rules of karma and dharma. It provides no hope of mercy for the persons who violate the rules and no man is so pure or sinless as to say that he walks in the ways of righteousness. But God as mother is forgiving and no sin is so sinful as not to merit mercy or dayā. Therefore every one seeks the grace of Lakṣmī or Pārvatī or Śakti as the very embodiment of redemptive love. But mercy by itself may encourage favouritism and indulgence and the sinner may exploit the quality of forgiveness. The Hindus therefore worship divinity in the dual form of Īśvara and Īśvari. Law is severe and love is indulgent; but in God law and love are wedded together and they are really one though they function as two.

CHAPTER III

JĪVA.

The study of the Jīva or the Ātman holds a central place in Hinduism. Hinduism insists on the sacredness of life and the solidarity of all Jīvas. The ātman is to be reflected on and realised before God or Paramātman is reflected on and realised. The ātman is different from the body made of prakṛti and its 23 elements. It is different from the gross body consisting of the five elements, namely, earth, water, fire, air and ether, known as the pañcabhūtas. It is not the five prāṇas and is more than life. It is not the five sense organs, namely the eye, the ear, the nose, the tongue and the organ of touch. The ātman is to be distinguished from the subtle body or sūkṣmaśarīra, consisting of manas, buddhi, citta and ahaṅkāra or the mind, reason and egoity. Hinduism regards the mind and reason as part of the body and the ātman as different from the sūkṣmaśarīra and the sthūlaśarīra or mind-body. The bodies come and go but the ātman never changes and it is eternal or nitya. It is beyond birth and death and beyond all mental changes, like the waking state, dream and deep sleep. It is a changeless entity by itself.

The Jīva is thus different from its quality of jñāna or consciousness. The jñāna or quality undergoes changes and not the substance or ātman. In the jāgrat or waking state, the Jīva is conscious of the external world, and its five sense organs are active. It sees things with the eyes, hears sounds with the ears, has the sensations of smell, taste and touch through the nose, the tongue and the skin respectively. Therefore sensations are in the Jīva and the objects which cause them are in the external world. In the dream state or svapna, the Jīva does not perceive things but is only mentally active and enjoys pleasure and pain. In deep sleep or susupti, the Jīva is at perfect rest and its consciousness does not work. Though it is not active, it is not non-existent; it is in a latent state.

The ātman is by nature self-effulgent, active, joyful and eternal. It is a mode or aṁśa of God and though it exists as an eternal entity, it is not separate from Him. It is not born and it does not die. It is beyond the past, the present and the future and is thus beyond time and it is beyond space. The ātman is essentially self-conscious and it has the quality of jñāna by which it thinks, feels and wills. It is a knowing subject and is not jaḍa or inert. It has moral freedom and it is not passive. It is joyful and is not miserable or sick-minded. In this way it abides in its own spiritual nature and is different from prakṛti and God. Ātman has its own dignity, intrinsic worth and autonomy. It is not a thing or physical substance like a stone or piece of wood which is acit or jada. It is not subject to prakṛti and its guṇas and is free from the instincts, like lust, anger, hatred, jealousy and it has self-mastery. Thus it is a spiritual personality which is free and eternal. It is a knower, a free agent and is joyful. The ātman that subjects itself to the evils of saṃsāra or the bondage of karma is called baddha-jīva. It somehow, owing to avidyā or ancient ignorance which cannot be explained, mistakes itself for the body made of prakṛti and suffers from the series of births and deaths. It is like the prince who exiles himself from his father's throne and joins the wild hunters in the forest, marries a hunter girl, begets children by her and thus gets immersed in savage life. The ātman somehow deserts its divine home, enters into the body made of acit, wallows in sense life and is caught up in the wheel of births and deaths. Why or how it lapses from the divine heritage and suffers from avidyā, kāma and karma, is a mystery. But the jīva alone is responsible for the evils and ills of worldliness and not any outside agency. Avidyā makes it identify itself with prakṛti and its guṇas; kāma makes it seek the pleasures of the senses and suffer from the pains of animal life and karma subjects it to the endless series of births and deaths. But the Jīva does not suffer from original sin or unmerited suffering. Though the origin of avidyā, or saṁsāra cannot be understood, it can be destroyed by jñāna, and the ātman can go back to God and return no more to saṁsāra. But as long as its true nature is concealed by avidyā, it is bound by karma and is subject to the rounds of births and deaths.

Karma.

The law of karma occupies an important place in Hindu Ethics, and it alone solves the problem of the inequalities of life and unmerited suffering. Why does the wicked man prosper in life and the good man suffer from all kinds of misery, physical, mental and social? and why does the new-born child suffer for the sins of its parents and from untold evils and why should there be evil and misery at all if there is a good God? These problems are as old as humanity itself. But of all the solutions offered, the theory of karma is the least objectionable. Evil and suffering no doubt exist but each man is responsible for the ills of life he undergoes and not God or the Devil. The theory of karma is the law of causation applied to moral life and each man reaps what he sows. The effect of karma or action done by thought, word and deed (or manas, vāk and kāya) is never lost; it is conserved in the mind-body or śarīra. The present karma is the effect of the past and is the cause of the future. In this way all karmanas are connected as cause and effect and they form a series without any beginning. The law of causation operates uniformly without any exception and it is the moral law of retribution. If a man does good deeds or punya-karma he is rewarded and he enjoys the effect of his deeds, like health, longevity of life, prosperity, power and glory; but if he does bad deeds he is punished and he suffers for his bad acts and they lead to disease, poverty and misery. Good and evil thus lead to pleasure and pain and there is a mathematical ratio between virtue and pleasure and vice and suffering. In this way every man is accountable for his good and bad deeds.

Transmigration.

The laws of rebirth and transmigration of Jivas follow as the consequence of karma. No child is born out of nothing; it is not born with an empty mind. It does not evolve from the parents and follow the laws of heredity. Every child is born with certain predispositions or vāsanās which are retained in the subtle body, as the effect of no deed is lost. When a person dies, the gross body alone is dissolved but the subtle body of the Jīva remains, retaining all the effects of its karma. The Jīva then enters into a new body suited to its past karma and is born again. Thus every birth is the result of past karma and is the cause of a new body and birth. Just as a man throws away worn out garments and puts on new garments, the Jīva throws away worn out bodies and puts on new bodies. Just as there is continuity in a man's life from infancy to old age and personal identity, so there is continuity of the same Jīva in the series of births and rebirths and personal identity. There is identity in spite of numerous births and this is due to the eternity of the Jīva.

The adventures of the Jīva in the world of samsāra are not confined to this earth alone. It migrates from body to body according to its karma in the cosmic spheres known as the three lokas ranging from Brahmaloka or Satyaloka above to the Pātāla below. In the celestial worlds above, starting with Svarga, the quality of sattva is dominant and the Jīva enjoys pleasure. In the nether regions, starting with Atala, the quality of tamas is dominant and Pātāla is the lowest region of darkness and the Jīva suffers from pain. But the middle region called Karma Bhūmi is influenced by rajas. It is the moral world of man and it is here that he does good deeds and bad deeds and their effect is reaped in the worlds above and below. There are other Brahmāṇḍas like this and they are countless like the stars and they are ruled by Īśvara according to the karma of the Jīvas. The worlds have no spatial meaning but they have hierarchical moral values. Good men ascend to higher regions according to their karma and enjoy celestial pleasures and when the effect is exhausted, they come down again and are born in different bodies, sub-human and human. Likewise wicked Jīvas suffer from pain and when it is exhausted, they have a new chance and are born again in this moral world.

Freedom.

The scientific view of karma in terms of cause and effect is open to the objection that it leads to fatalism and pessimism and that it does not provide any hope of bettering the future. Since every man reaps what he sows, he has to submit weakly to what happens without any moral freedom. He has to endure what cannot be cured and is a slave of circumstances. But the scientific view is only one aspect of karma as the more important side is the assertion of the moral freedom or freedom of the will. It says that every man can control his inclinations like anger, fear, lust, hatred and jealousy and that he can control his future. The scientific theory applies only to prārabdha-karma and not to sañcita-karma. The former refers to the karma that has already happened, like the birth of a person, and which cannot be changed. But the latter refers to the future which is in our hands. Every man is the master or architect of his destiny and not even a God can alter it. If a man has a conflict of desires, like the choice of a career, he has the moral freedom to decide for himself which career he can choose. He can control his passions, like anger or hatred and attain moral victory. But if he chooses the way of the animal, then he once again is chained to the wheel of saṁsāra. But he too will one day begin to realise the futility and pain of choosing the animal way of life and turn towards the higher path of freedom through self-control. In either case freedom is inherent in every soul to choose the higher or the lower. A soul has freedom to choose but not the power to get the results of what it chooses as it likes. The results depend on the laws of the worlds and causation (karina).

CHAPTER IV

PRAKṚTI.

Every religion deals with the nature and function of the three ultimate entities, Nature, Self and God and their relation. But, it is Hinduism that makes the study exact by calling them acit, cit and Īśvara or Prakṛti, Puruṣa and Puruṣottama or pāśa, paśu and pati and defining their relative positions. The meaning and value of Nature or prakṛti will be just considered. Nature refers to the objects in the world, like houses, trees, rivers, seas and mountains. It also includes the sky, the Sun, the Moon and the stars. The scientist is interested in studying the phenomena of nature in all their details. While the chemist seeks to know the various metals and non-metals that compose the world, the astronomer enquires into the nature of the heavenly bodies, like the Sun, the Moon and the stars. The Biologist desires to understand the nature and function of the body. While the scientist observes the phenomena of nature and tries to know the general laws underlying them, the religious man seeks to know Nature and distinguish it from the Jīva and God. His primary interest is the knowledge of God who is the creator of the world and his mind goes from the created over to the creator.

We perceive the world around us through the five senses, namely, the eye, the ear, the nose, the tongue and the hand. In perceiving a rose, for example, we see its red colour through the eye, we pluck it from the plant by the hand and smell its fragrance by means of the nose; we taste its sweetness by the tongue and so on. In the same way, we perceive all other things in the world like trees, houses, lakes, rivers and hills. The world above consists of the sky, the Sun, the Moon and the stars. Geography teaches us that the Earth in which we live consists of countries, continents, seas and oceans and it is a planet which goes round the Sun. India, the country in which we live, is a big country with large rivers like the Ganges, mountains like the Himalayas, trees like the banyan and it is very sacred to us as the land of spirituality. The Sun is the centre of heat and light round which six other planets like Jupiter and Saturn move, and the Moon goes round the Earth. The whole is called the Solar system and every star is said to be a Sun with its own planets and moons.

The study of Astronomy impresses us with the vastness of the solar and stellar systems, contrasted with our own smallness. Light travels at the rate of 182,000 miles a second and it takes $3\frac{1}{2}$ years for the light of the nearest star to reach us. From these we know the greatest mystery, and imagination that is staggered by the infinity of space. What is true of space is also true of time. While space refers to co-existence of things, time is a succession of events.

The object of studying prakṛti or acit is to know that our body is made of prakṛit and that we are different from it. The body is made of earth, water, fire, air and ether and it has five sense organs, and is called the gross body or sthūlaśarīra. There is a subtle body called the sūkṣmaśarīra and it consists of manas, buddhi, citta and ahaṅkāra. Though in western Psychology they are classed as mind different from the body made of matter, Hinduism treats them as physical changes in a subtle form. Ahaṅkāra is egoity, buddhi is determination, manas and citta are particular perishing changes in the mind. Śarīra is thus subtle and gross and may be called psycho-physical. Nothing is really lost and there is only change from one state to another.

Prakṛti, as Sāṅkhya philosophy says, consists of twenty-four tattvas, namely, mahat (buddhi, citta) ahaṅkāra, the five jñānendriyas, the five karmendriyas making the body, and the five elements or pañcabhūtas and their earlier subtle conditions known as pañcatanmātras which make up the body and the world. Prakṛti has three qualities, namely, sattva, rajas and tamas, Godness or Purity, action and inertia. These three qualities are present in varying proportions in all the twenty-four tattvas.

CHAPTER V

DARŚANAS.

It is very difficult to draw a hard and fast line of distinction between religion and philosophy, especially our religion and philosophy. The former deals with doctrines and rituals and the latter with the ultimate problems of life, like the nature of the world, the soul and God and their inter-relations. The one is practical and the other is theoretical. But our ancestors were of a philosophic bent of mind from the beginning and they translated their philosophy into practice. Our religion and philosophy are intermixed and so in an exposition of religion, philosophy legitimately comes in. Our people identify the ultimate reality of philosophy with the highest Godhead of religion and give a theistic colouring to their philosophy. So our religion supplies the spiritual needs of our people and at the same time satisfies the mental wants of a high order. In one isolated school of philosophy this distinction is maintained, and naturally it did not appeal to the majority of the nation. There is therefore much discrepancy between their mode of life and their speculations. It may be all right for highly intellectual and gifted people but for the ordinary man, it is of no use.

Philosophy, as we have said, discusses the nature of the three ultimate entities, matter, soul and God and their interrelation. It also treats of another question which is intimately connected with the relation between soul and God, namely, the life after death, the condition of the soul after its separation from the material body, i.e., the nature of Mukti. If the soul travels from this world to another the path taken by it also comes under its purview. This leads to the question of rebirth or transmigration and its cause, karma. All these and some related topics come under discussion in philosophy and these problems have been solved differently by different seers. In this way different schools of philosophy have arisen in our country, the chief of which are six, called darśanas.

The chief authority for the acceptance of the existence of God is the Veda, because He cannot be realised by the senses, nor can His existence be inferred from any known facts. There are some schools of philosophy which do not accept the authority of the Veda and mainly depend upon perception and inference. As they do not recognise the Veda, there can be no place for God in their philosophies. They are the atheistic schools of Cārvākas, Bauddhas and Jainas. They are called Nāstikas. We need not consider them here.

Ancient systems.

The six āstikadarśanas are: 1. Sāṅkhya, 2. Yoga, 3. Vaiśeṣika, 4. Nyāya, 5. Pūrva-mīmāṃsā and 6. Uttaramīmāṃsā or Vedānta.

Sāṅkhya and Yoga are similar in their central teaching and so they go together. Prakṛti, or Mūlaprakṛti as it is called, is independent of Puruṣa or soul and is the cause of this world. Puruṣa is eternal, caitanya or intelligence. Prakṛti is composed of three guṇas called sattva, rajas and taṃas. In the state of Pralaya the guṇas are in equilibrium; in śṛṣṭi they are unequal. Buddhi is a product of Prakṛti when it is near Puruṣa. It is also called mahat and antahkaraṇa. Puruṣa imagines the activity of buddhi to be his own and thus becomes ātman. This attribution is saiṃsāra. From buddhi through ahaṅkāra are produced the ten senses and their objects (bhūtas) and tanmātras. Puruṣa has no qualities other than caitanya and it is eternal. There are innumerable Puruṣas. The realisation of the distinction between Prakṛti and Puruṣa puts an end to saiṃsāra. This is mukti. Sāṅkhya philosophy does not accept God (Īśvara). The Yoga philosophy accepts God but attributes no powers of creation, etc., to Him. Mukti is the state of kaivalya or independence from Nature (Prakṛti).

The Yoga system recommends certain practices to control the mind, which lead to the recognition of the distinction between Prakṛti and Puruṣa. They are yama (control of senses), niyama (purification of mind and body), āsana (convenient posture), prāṇāyāma (control of breath), pratyāhāra (control of the mind), dhyāna (meditation), dhāraṇā (concentration) and samādhi (attainment).

Nyāya and Vaiśeṣika similarly agree in their essentials and so can be treated together. The world is made of atoms. The world is created by Īśvara and is real. The souls are infinite in number. The Naiyāyikas establish Īśvara by inference. The world is composed of parts and is therefore the effect of a cause like a pot. Everything that is produced must have a producer who knows its causes and uses. So there must be a being who produced this world. He must be superior to souls whose knowledge is limited and who are bound by karma. The souls are undergoing the pleasure and pain of saṁsāra from the eternal course of karma. Some ātmans who perform the prescribed duties, without any object in view, simply to please God, attain power to perform Yoga by His grace, and by its means attain perpetual freedom from pain, which is mokṣa according to these Schools of thought. There will be no more pleasure or pain or knowledge. So this sort of salvation is styled pāṣāṇa-mukti by others.

The true value of the Nyāya system lies in the extraordinary method of critical enquiry developed in the modern school. The modern Nyāya relegated the discussion of the problem of the ultimate entities to the background and developed into a science of correct knowledge. The discussion of the pramāṇas or means of correct knowledge acquired prominence in it. Even here inference is discussed in its minutest detail and in the most comprehensive manner. To the Naiyāyika the Veda is authoritative, not because it is eternal but because it is the word of Īśvara, and therefore is infallible.

The School of Pūrvamīmāṃsā lays stress on dharma or performance of the acts enjoined by the Veda. As the course of karma is eternal, samsāra too is eternal. There is no creation, no destruction. Those who perform acts prohibited by the Veda, are born as worms and insects or go to hell. Those who perform karma for attaining some desire will be reborn again and again. If the dharma enjoined in the Veda is performed for its own sake, without desiring any benefit, it produces what is termed apūrva, which in its turn destroys the connection with karma and makes the soul realise itself. This is mokṣa according to this school. Then the soul enjoys eternal bliss. This school accepts no separate God or Īśvara, who will dole out the fruits of the acts.

The Sāṅkhyas, the Yogas and the Pūrva-mīmāṃsakas accept an infinite number of jīvas who are eternal and who are found in everything; but they do not accept an Īśvara who is capable of fulfilling their desires. To the Pūrva-mīmāṃsakas, the Vedas are eternal and impersonal. The omission to perform the prescribed duties results in sin.

The most popular of the darśanas is the Uttaramīmāṃsā or Vedānta as it is also called. Although the others are as much darśanas or schools of thought as this, still they are now only of academic interest and there is no class of people who specifically follow any of those views in their daily life. It can therefore be called the living philosophy of the day and when we hear of Indian philosophy now a days, our mind generally comprehends only the varieties of Vedānta and nothing more. As its name Vedānta implies, its teaching is based mainly on the Upaniṣads which form the concluding portion of the Veda. While the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā, which stresses on dharma, is based on the former portion of the Veda called the Brāhmaṇa, the Vedānta is based on the latter portion. Hence the names Pūrva- and Uttara-Mīmāṃsā. There is the school of philosophy which affirms that the two darśanas are supplementary to each other and really form one darśana. There is no wonder then if the Uttaramīmāṃsā also adopts the view that the Veda is eternal and impersonal and that the dharma taught in it should be followed in practice. The Bhagavadgītā in the Mahābhārata contains in a nut-shell the teachings of the Upaniṣads in very simple language without their illustrative stories and esoteric methods. For this reason, it has become the most popular hand-book of our religion in recent times, especially with the laymen who cannot drink deep in the Upaniṣadic springs. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the light of the world, teaches the ways of Karma Yoga, Jñāna Yoga, Bhakti Yoga and Prapatti Yoga to Arjuna on the battlefield of Kurukṣetra and makes him fight the battle of life without rāga and dveṣa and attain His feet by prapatti.

The teachings contained in the Upaniṣads have been systematised and stated in an aphoristic manner by Bādarāyaṇa or Vyāsa in his Brahma-sūtras. This is the main text-book of Vedānta. This is interpreted in different ways by different commentators and thus arose several schools of Vedānta. The most important of these are Viśiṣṭādvaita, Advaita, Dvaita and Pāṣupata. Śaṅkarā-cārya is the chief exponent of Advaita philosophy, Rāmānujācārya of Viśiṣṭādvaita philosophy, and Pūrṇaprajñācārya of Dvaita philosophy and Śrī-kantha of Pāṣupata philosophy.

According to Advaita philosophy, Brahman alone is real and everything else, like the self (knower) and Īśvara and the world (knowable) and knowledge, is unreal; Brahman is nirviśeṣa and pure consciousness. Nirviśeṣa means undifferentiated. Three kinds of differences are possible; difference between similar things, like the individuals of a class; difference between things of different kinds and difference which exists in the thing itself i.e., between it and its qualities. There is no difference between Brahman and the Jīvas which are both of the form of cit. Īśvara is Brahman reflected in māya or cosmic illusion and Jīva is Brahman reflected in avidyā or subjective illusion. Brahman is eternal and by its concealing and perplexing powers, it makes the Jīvas unable to realise their real nature and produce different kinds of illusions in them. Still as it is false, there is no question of difference between it and Brahman. As Brahman itself is consciousness, bliss and truth, there can be no qualities like consciousness, bliss and truth, apart from Brahman, and so there can be no difference between Brahman and its qualities. Samsāra is delusion of Jīvas by avidyā and the disappearance of avidyā at the rise of jñāna derived from the mahāvākyas of the Upaniṣads is mokṣa. The stock example for the delusion of Jīvas by ajñāna is the rope or the crack in the ground mistaken for a snake. The false snake-idea is attributed to the real rope (or crack) and the illusion is dispelled on realising the truth of the rope (or crack). A man who desires to attain mokṣa or release, must have four qualifications, namely viveka, vairāgya possession of śama, dama etc., and sincere desire for release; that is to say, he should know that Brahman alone is real and the world is false, renounce everything, have self-control and have thirst for release. Jñāna is the only means to mokṣa and karma and bhakti are only aids to jñāna. When once the jñāna emerges, he becomes a mukta even in this body and he is then called a jīvanmukta. This is the peculiarity of Advaita. The other schools do not admit jīvanmukti and say that Jīva attains mokṣa by casting off this mortal body which is a real product of karma.

There are two other schools which go by the names of their founders, Bhāskara and Yādava-prakāśa. Bhāskara says that Brahman is saguṇa; there are Jīvas and the world, which are also real. By the limiting power of Brahman he becomes different and has forms like buddhi, senses, body, etc. Parts of Brahman having these limitations are called Jīvas. Although Brahman is indivisible like space, still just as space limited by a pot acquires the name of pot-space, so Brahman with the above limitations is separately termed a Jīva. Samsāra is the limitation caused by the upādhis or limiting adjuncts of Brahman. The upādhis are dispersed by true knowledge caused by incessant meditation on Brahman after attaining the knowledge of the unity of Brahman and Jīva by means of Vedic karma and jñāna together. Mokṣa is the union of Brahman and Jīva on the disappearance of the limitations.

Yādavaprakāśa says that Brahman transforms itself into the forms of cit, acit and Īśvara by real pariṇāma. Cit is jīva; acit is body, senses, etc. Īśvara is the ordainer of every thing. Jīva does not know his unity with Brahman and this sense of difference is samsāra. The fetters of samsāra can be shaken off by performing good deeds and by God. True knowledge leads to union with Brahman and attainment of mukti. Even then there is unity as well as difference between Brahman, the Jīva and the world.

According to Viśiṣṭādvaita, soul (cit), matter (acit) and God (Īśvara) are real. Of these cit and acit are the special qualities, prakāra, of Īśvara, and Īśvara is the possessor of these qualities or modes (prakārin). A prakāra is that by the help of which its substratum is known. Prakāra cannot exist without the prakārin; therefore Brahman possessed of cit and acit is termed one. As prakārin and prakāra are intrinsically different, there is difference in their nature. Acit is of three varieties, like śuddhasattva, miśrasattva and sattvaśūnya. Śuddhasattva is self-effulgent. It is called Paramapada. Time is sattvaśūnya; but it is also eternal like space. Miśrasattva, being subject to sattva, rajas and tamas, develops in the form of the 24 tattvas called prakṛti, mahat, ahaṅkāra, the subtle elements, senses, etc. It also forms the body and ahaṅkāra of Jivas according to their previous karma. Samsāra is the cycle of repeated births and deaths of embodied souls brought about by maṃakāra or egoism and ajñāna. In the cycle of karma and avidyā the sins of some persons are destroyed by their virtues. Then they pray to God for redemption. They realise the true knowledge of the Śāstras by the instruction of a good teacher attained by God's grace or dayā. They duly practise the obligatory and optional duties according to their station in life and acquire the enriching spiritual qualities of śama, dama, tapas, śauca, ahimsā, ārjava, bhaya, abhaya, sthāna, viveka, ahimsā, dayā, etc. They surrender themselves to God and due to bhakti recollect and reflect on Śāstra and meditate upon His qualities and get rid of ignorance (ajñāna) by His grace. They practise bhaktiyōga and attain mukti by prapatti and God's grace when they leave the body. Mukti is of two kinds, kaivalya and reaching Īśvara. Kaivalya is the enjoyment of the pleasure of the realization of ātman. The other is attaining Īśvara in Paramapada and enjoying his svarūpa and eternal bliss. Īśvara in Paramapada has His own form or rūpa of divinely beautiful body. He is one with His beloved ones, Śrī, Bhū, and Nīlā who are His concrete krpā, and with nitya-sūris who are externally free like Ananta, Garuḍa and Viṣvaksena, and the freed souls or muktas. His chief līlā consists in releasing the other Jīvas also from karma and making them into his likeness.

Viśiṣṭādvaita says that the absolute Brahman is the same as Vṣṇu, Nārāyaṇa, Vāsudeva, or Venkatesvara. He incarnates on historic occasions in different forms to redeem mankind. In response to the prayers of this devotees, He incarnates permanently as idols or arcā, owing to His infinite love. So according to Viśiṣṭādvaita, Viṣṇu or Vāsudeva Himself has His home in the temple of Tirumalai. Out of His infinite love for the erring mortals of Kali, the Infinite has incarnated permanently in Tirumalai and the mortal becomes immortal by utter surrender to His grace. So there is no exaggeration in the statement that Tirupati is Kaliyuga Vaikuṇṭha. Just as the relation between body and soul is śarīra-śarīri-bhāva, so the relation between soul and Īśvara is the same. So Īśvara is the inner soul of everything in this world and every name and form ultimately applies to Brahman or Śrīnivāsa, the self of all selves.

According to Dvaita philosophy, soul (cit), world (acit) and God (Īśvara) are different tattvas. God is only the instrumental or efficient cause of the world. He is Viṣṇu himself. He possesses all the auspicious qualities and has a beautiful body made of jñāna, ānanda, etc. The souls and the world depend on Him. The souls are infinitesimal in size and are different from each other. They are of three kinds according to their guṇas—tamoyogyas, nityasamsārins and muktiyogyas. The first class of Jīvas dwell in Hell for ever. The last class are eternally free and dwell in Viṣṇuloka. The second class of Jīvas attain direct cognition of God by their practices beginning with renunciation of the results of their actions and ending with meditation on Viṣṇu and enjoy the pleasures of muktas according to their nature. If they are free from impressions (vāśana) of hatred etc., they attain mukti and enjoy supreme pleasure. The relation between God and soul is that of svāmin and dāsa (master and servant). So the summum bonum of life, according to this school is service to God, here in this world and beyond.

According to Pāṣupata, there are three eternal entities, God (pati), Soul (paśu) and Nature (pāśa). God is the supreme pati or Parameśvara. He is only the instrumental or efficient cause of creation while the atoms are the material cause. The Jīva (soul) is different from Īśvara and matter but is self-conscious. It is like a crystal and assumes the form of that with which it comes in contact. When caught up in pāśa which is made up of ignorance, inertness and desire (āṇava, māya and kāmya) it undergoes samsāra like pāśa. When the Jīva contacts Pati it becomes like Him. The Jīva attains mukti by following certain practices which free it of its ignorance etc. Mukti, according to this system, is Śiva-sārūpya (likeness to Śiva) and not Śivaikya (identity with Śiva). Śiva, it says, is love itself and by His grace (aruḷ), He makes the Jīva free from its impurities. The highest form of jñāna consists in service to Śiva and His devotees.

Śaiva and Śākta philosophies are both comprised in Pāṣupata. In Śākta, Śakti or Devī (called Caṇḍī) is supreme. She is worshipped in three forms, Kālī, Lakṣmī and Sarasvatī. Owing to the love of Śakti, the world emanates from Śiva and merges in Him. By means of jñāna and bhakti, the Jīva attains mukti and becomes one with Śiva. Certain sects of Śāktas engage themselves in non-Vedic practices, like worshipping God in a wine-pot, smearing the body with ashes from the burning ground, etc.

Mediaeval Schools.

The Viśiṣṭādvaita philosophy with its doctrines of bhakti and prapatti and emphasis on the equality of all bhaktas and prapannas, irrespective of caste or sex, appealed to the minds of all people and it soon spread all over the country. Many pious people came forward in Northern India to propagate the faith. But their teachings were coloured by their temperamental bias. The theistic tinge which Viśiṣṭādvaita assumed in the identification of Brahman (Paramātmān) with Nārāyaṇa (Viṣṇu) caught the imagination of these saints and they identified Him with those particular forms of Nārāyaṇa which attracted their minds. In whatever form He is adored, He appears in that form and accepts the devotion.

Rāmānanda was the first of these teachers. He taught that Īśvara resides in every Jīva and He is Rāma, the righteous. The force of his personal attraction and teachings of Rāmānanda can be judged from the fact that even Muslims became his disciples. Kabir followed his teachings and incorporated them with Islam and evolved his School of Kabirpanthis.

Vallabha taught that Śrī Kṛṣṇa, was Brahman. His form is made of spiritual love and it is Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa. He sports with the Jīvas in Gokula. Creation is the līlā of Kṛṣṇa. Bhakti is the only means of attaining Kṛṣṇa. Bhakti is irrepressive love or puṣṭi. On release from the body the bhakta goes to Gokula, which is beyond Vaikuṇṭha, and enjoys the bliss of communion with Kṛṣṇa.

Caitanya taught the Rādhā Kṛṣṇa cult. The absolute Brahman is Śrī Kṛṣṇa who is eternally sporting with Rādhā, his beloved 'other'. He has a bewitching form of beauty and he attracts the Jīvas to him by his entrancing beauty. Bhakti or prēma is the only means of attaining the bliss of Kṛṣṇa. The saint taught a number of bhāvas in the love towards Kṛṣṇa, like those of God as ruler, master, mate, etc., of which the best is the bhāva of Kṛṣṇa as spiritual bridegroom. The love of Kṛṣṇa exceeds the pleasures of Vaikuṇṭha.

Modern Religious movements.

Brahmosamaj, Aryasamaj and Ramakrishna Mission are effective reactions to the proselytising influence of alien religions. They are movements in response to their ideas of the needs of the age.

LITERATURE.

The Vedas form the fundamental basis of our religion. They are the words of Brahman and are said to be Brahman itself. These were uttered by great R̥ṣis (Seers). They are the oldest literary specimens of the world. Their language is an ancient form of Sanskrit. The Vedas are four in number called the R̥gveda, Yajurveda, Sāmaveda and Atharvaveda. Each Veda comprises two parts, called the Karmabhāga and the Tattvabhāga—the portion that treats of action (karma) and the portion that treats of reality (tattva). The conduct to be followed by those who aspire to acquire punya or virtue is detailed in the former portion and the eternal truths of life are described in the latter portion. Brahman is that by knowing which everything is known and so the portion of the Veda which treats of Brahman is the most important portion. It is called the Vedānta or the Upaniṣad. The former portion may again be divided into two parts called the Mantra part and the Brāhmaṇa part. The Brāhmaṇa portion refers to the details of the ritual and indicates the particular mantra to be recited in each ritual act; the Mantra portion supplies the mantras.

The two parts are mixed up in the Kṛṣṇa Yajurveda; in all the other Vedas they are found separate.

Although the Rṣis first uttered Vedas, we should not think that they composed them. The Vedas, according to Hinduism are eternal. They have been existing for all time and are beyond time. It is said that even the world is created by Brahman in accordance with the Vedas. The Vedas are transmitted to the men in different ages either by God himself or through sages inspired by Him. So the sages, by the grace of God, visualised the Vedas and transmitted them to us. As they are not composed by men, the Vedas are infallible. The minds of men are fallible and so whatever a man does is liable to error. But the Vedas are not so. There can be no mistake in them and they compel recognition and response. They are eternal, spiritual imperatives which require to be spiritually obeyed. In accordance with the above view, the language of the Vedas is called the Devabhāṣā or Divine language. The linguistic evidence is in favour of the high antiquity of the Vedas and its eternal holiness. The age of the Vedas cannot be historically determined as they are beyond history and are super-historical, not merely pre-historical.

Though the last portion of every Veda is the Upaniṣad or Vedānta, still Upaniṣads are not all attached to the Vedas. A large number of the Upaniṣads arose on the model of the Vedānta. The Aitareya, the Kauṣitaki, the Kaṭha, the Taittirīya, the Īśa, and the Chāndogya are the last portions or Vedānta of the respective Vedas. Besides these there are some more Upaniṣads which are as important and authoritative as the above. They are the Bṛhadāranyaka, the Śvetāśvatara, the Muṇḍa and the Māṇḍūkya, the Maitrāyaṇīya, and the Kena Upaniṣads. Of these the Bṛhadāranyaka belongs to the Śuklayajurveda, the Śvetāśvatara and the Maitrāyaṇīya belong to the Kṛṣṇa-Yajurveda, the Kena to the Sāmaveda and the Muṇḍa and the Māṇḍūkya to the Atharvaveda. Excluding the Śvetāśvatara and the Maitrāyaṇīya, the remaining Upaniṣads are generally termed as the Ten Upaniṣads. They are the authorities for our Vedānta system and are frequently quoted by our Ācāryas in support of their views. Besides these, there are nearly a hundred other Upaniṣads which underlie our sectarian practices and symbols.

It should not be supposed that every Upaniṣad gives a succinct account of any one system of philosophy. They are rather discussions on different topics comprised in the systems. The whole body of Upaniṣadic literature has been studied, and the contents have been systematised and expounded by Bādarāyaṇa or Vyāsa in his Uttaramīmāṃsā Sūtra or Darśana. The Sūtras and the Upaniṣadic statements or śrutis on which they are based are differently interpreted by different Ācāryas according to the system of philosophy advocated by them. In this way different systems of Vedānta arose, like Advaita, Viśiṣṭādvaita, Dvaita, Śaiva etc. Most of the Ācāryas wrote commentaries on the important Upaniṣads in accordance with their systems of philosophy.

The next authority for our religion is the Dharma Śāstras. They are of two categories, the Sūtras and the Smṛtis. The Sūtras, as their name indicates, are in the form of aphorisms and the Smṛtis are in metrical form. If śruti is what is directly revealed to the Ṛṣis, the Smṛti is what is recollected by them and recorded afterwards. The Dharmaśāstras give the code of conduct applicable to each section of society and to the whole society in common. All that is contained in the Dharmaśāstras is said to be taken from the Vedas which teach fundamental ethical truths and they claim to teach nothing new. If there is any explicit contradiction between what is laid down in the Vedas and what is taught in the Dharmaśāstras, the former are to be followed in preference to the latter, as they are absolutely and universally true. If there is anything new in the Dharmaśāstras and there is nothing corresponding to it in the available Vedas, we have to suppose that the corresponding portion of the Veda is now extinct but was available to the authors of the Dharmaśāstras. We should not discard what is laid down in the Dharmaśāstras on account of this accident. But when the Dharmaśāstras of two Ṛṣis prescribe different courses of conduct with regard to the same subject, we should not reject either or both as wrong, but it should be understood that we are at liberty to follow either course at our option. But if there is tradition in our family with regard to one of the courses, we should follow that alone as such a tradition perpetuates an ancient Dharma practised by the rest.

The Dharmasūtras are the concluding portions of the Kalpasūtras. The Kalpa is one of the six Āṅgas of the Vedas. They are Śikṣā or phonetics, Vyākaraṇa or Grammar, Chandas or prosody, Nirukta or derivation and Kalpa or procedure. The whole Kalpa teaches us all the procedure for the Vedic rites, domestic rites and duties to humanity in general. But all Dharmasūtras that we inherit are not the concluding portions of Kalpasūtras. Some Ṛṣis have written complete Kalpasūtras while others wrote only particular portions. To the former class belong the Dharmasūtras of Āpastamba, Hiranya-keśin, Bodhāyana and Vaikhānasa. The Dharma- sūtras of Gautama and Vasiṣṭha are independent works and no Kalpasūtras by the same authors are available.

The traditional number of Smṛtis or law books is eighteen. They are (1) Manusmṛti, (2) Parāśarasmṛti, (3) Vasiṣṭhasmṛti, (4) Śaṅkha-smṛti, (5) Likhitasmṛti, (6) Atrismṛti, (7) Viṣṇu-smṛti, (8) Hārītasṁṛti, (9) Yamasṁṛti, (10) Aṅgi-rassmṛti, (11) Uśanassmṛti, (12) Saṁvartasmṛti, (13) Brhaspatismṛti, (14) Kātyāyanasmṛti, (15) Dak-ṣasmṛti, (16) Vyāsasmṛti, (17) Yājñavalkyasmṛti and (18) Śātātāpasmṛti. All these Smṛtis are equally authoritative but the Manusmṛti has commanded universal respect from the authors of all other Smṛtis and authors of the Itihāsas and Purāṇas because it is the most comprehensive and the most elucidative or clear. The Parā-śarasmṛti is considered to be the standard work for this Kali age. It enumerates exhaustively the special rules for the Kali age. It is said in the Manusmṛti itself that Manu's laws apply to the Kṛtayuga, Gautama's laws to the Tretāyuga, the laws of Śaṅkha and Likhita to the Dvāpara-yuga and those of Parāśara to the Kaliyuga.

There are some other works which are written by the Ṛṣis like the Dharmaśāstras and which are considered as equally authoritative although they do not strictly come under the category of Dharmaśāstra. These are Itihāsas, Purāṇas, Āgamas and Tantras. The Itihāsas describe how the duties taught in our Smṛtis are discharged by different individuals, how men should act when there is apparent conflict of duties, and thereby create in the minds of people a desire to follow dharma and to shun adharma. The Purāṇas describe how the incarnations like those of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa come down to the level of man in order to elevate men to the divine level and reveal to us the mighty power of God by describing the course of creation and destruction and the right and wrong manner of governing the people. The Āgamas contain rules for the construction of temples and shaping of arcās and the consecration and worship of the latter. The method of pleasing the Gods in an easy manner and thereby attaining advantages in this and the next world of svarga and finally mokṣa by following the Yoga is described in the Tantras.

The Itihāsas are the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata. The Rāmāyaṇa teaches how the conduct of the people towards different persons is to be regulated by upholding ideals for each case through the story of Rāma and Sītā. The Rāmāyaṇa is as much a story of Rāma as of Sītā and teaches strīdharma also. The way in which a son should obey his father, the manner in which the brothers should love each other, the way in which the wife should obey her husband, the manner of the devotion of a servant towards his master, how friends should love each other and work for mutual good, how men and women should conduct themselves towards each other, the feminine virtues of gentleness and love and several other principles of our religion are taught through the life and adventures of Rāma and Sītā. It also brings home to all people the principle that people should be honoured for their moral worth and not for their birth and that pious creatures too deserve respect and service. Above all the Rāmāyaṇa is termed a śaraṇāgati-śāstra and teaches the cardinal principle of our religion that a man who sincerely seeks another for protection should never be abandoned. God as redeemer is anxious to save mankind even if they at least once pray for His mercy. The book also illustrates the principle that God incarnates Himself here in times of historic crises in different forms when the world is filled with vice, for the purpose of saving the virtuous and punishing the wicked. Punishment is only an act of kindness to redeem the wicked from their career of vice and every effort is made to reform them. This last principle is better illustrated by the other great Itihāsa, the Mahābhārata. Several other principles of our religion are taught in this work through its episodes such as truthfulness, godliness, purity of women, mercy towards supplicants, forbearance, penance and so on. So many principles of our religion are illustrated in this work that it is termed a Dharmaśāstra itself and is even called the fifth Veda. Whole chapters in it are devoted mainly to teach dharma incidentally in the course of the story for the time being. The Mokṣa-dharma, the Viduranīti, the Sanatsujātīya, and the Anugīta are some such important sections. But the most important of these which has acquired universal reputation is the Bhagavadgīta (the Lord's song or teaching) in eighteen chapters of about 700 stanzas. Although a chapter in the epic, it has acquired independent recognition by virtue of the highest teaching enshrined in it. At the commencement of the Great Battle, Arjuna feels doubt as to the course of conduct he should follow and seizing the occasion, a sermon on conduct has been taught to him and through him to the world. Karmayoga, Jñānayoga and Bhaktiyoga are taught in all their detail in the first, second and third sextants of the work. The fundamental principles of our religion which are of universal appeal have been clearly taught in this work. The general principles that none should shrink from doing his duty in whatever difficult position he is placed, that everyone who sincerely worships God, in whatever form it may be, will certainly be saved, that the mercy of God alone can save humanity from their sins and the like taught in it have made it the universal text-book of all religions and secured for it world-wide recognition. Our people have recognised it as one of the three basic authorities of our religion and philosophy by including it in the Prasthāna-traya. There are innumerable commentaries on it and translations of it. Everyone should read it and put the principles taught in it in practice.

The Purāṇas describe the history of the world. They describe how the world is created, how it is preserved and governed and finally how it is periodically destroyed. The world of cid-acit is eternal; it is subtle in pralaya and gross in sṛṣṭi. They show how the morality of the world is preserved by God, how the wicked are punished and then redeemed and the virtuous saved. They describe the different methods and incarnations of God at critical periods in the world to maintain its moral and spiritual order. They teach the principles of our religion through their episodes. They also proclaim the glory or vibhūti of the arcāvatāra of God through their descriptions of the power of the different kṣetras and they also describe the holy tīrthas in our country. They describe the methods of penance and devotion to God to attain salvation. They therefore form one of the important class of text-books for our religion. The most important of them are eighteen in number. They are divided into three classes called Sāttvika, Rājasa and Tāmasa according as they extol the glory of Viṣṇu, Brahma or Śiva.

There are an equal number of Upapurāṇas which mostly deal with the glories of different Gods.

The Āgamas are treatises by sages on the practical side of religion. They contain rules for the construction of the temples, making of arcā, consecration of the temples and idols, worship of the arcā and expiatory ceremonies for acts of commission and omission. Incidentally they treat of town-planning to show the place of temple in a planned town and the qualifications of the worshipper. The various incarnations of God are also represented in arcā and different kinds of arcā are consecrated for different purposes of worship. These Āgamas are two-fold,—the Vaiṣṇava and the Śaiva, according as they treat of the temples, arcā and worship of the different forms of Viṣṇu or Śiva. The Pāñcarātra and the Vaikhānasa are the Vaiṣṇava āgamas. The former is said to be taught by Nārāyaṇa Himself, while the latter is taught by Saint Vikhanas. The ancient works on the Āgamas are called the Samhitās. They are Pādma- samhitā, Paramasamhitā, Sāttvatasamhitā, Kapīñ-jalasarṃhitā, Īśvarasamhitā, Parāśarasamhitā, Bhāradvājasamhitā, Ahīrbudhnyasamhitā and Viṣṇu-tilaka. The Vaikhānasa Samhitas are said to be four composed by the four Ṛṣis, Atri, Maṛīci, Kāśyapa and Bhṛgu. All the works by these authors have not survived to us. Śaiva āgamas are said to be twenty-eight in number.

Each Āgama has four sections in it called (1) Caryā (2) Kriyā (3) Yoga and (4) Jñāna. The first treats of the daily duties; the second of the worship of God; the third of the practices tending to the control of the senses and for the meditation of God. The last treats of the nature of God, the constitution of the body and mukti.

Tantras are practical treatises of religion. By means of worship of arcā or yantras, by means of repetition of mantras or mystic utterances, by means of upāsanas, they provide courses for developing the hidden power in man leading to the realization of God. These are also used for the attainment of worldly desires.

All the above literature is in the Sanskrit language. But besides this, there is a large body of religious literature in Tamil which is considered to be equally authoritative in Viśiṣṭādvaita and Śaiva siddhānta. They are works of the Vaiṣṇava Ālṅvārs and Śaiva Nāyanmārs. They are a class of highly gifted saints who, by their wisdom and conduct, have realised God and had communion with Him. Their works are the outpourings of their religious consciousness. The Vaiṣṇava religious hymns consist of four thousand stanzas and are collectively known as the Divyaprabandham. The Āḷvārs or Vaiṣṇava saints are twelve in number and their works, as they are collected in the Divyaprabandham, are as follows. The first three Āḷvārs, Poygai Āḷvār, Bhūtat Āḷvār and Pey Āḷvār have each 100 stanzas to their credit in Īyarpā. Tirumaḷiṣai Āḷvār has to his credit 96 stanzas in Īyarpā and Tiruccandaviruttam (120 stanzas) in Mudalāyiram. Nammāḷvār, the greatest of the Āḷvārs, has four compositions to his credit, Tiruviruttam (100 stanzas), Tiruvāṣariyam (7 stanzas), Periyatiruvandādi (87 stanzas), all included in the Īyarpā, and Tiruvāymoli, consisting of 1102 stanzas. It is said that these four poems stand respectively for the four Vedas, R̥gveda, Yajurveda, Atharvaveda and Sāmaveda. The last is the most famous of the Tamil religious poems and contains the essence of the Vaiṣṇava religion and is profusely commented upon. Kulaśekhara Āḷvār composed the 105 stanzas of Perumāḷtirumoli included in the Mudalāyiram. Periyāḷvār composed the famous Tirupallāṇḍu of 12 stanzas and Tirumoli consisting of 461 stanzas, both included in the Mudalāyiram.

Tonḍaraḍippoḍi Ālvār composed Tirumālai (45 stanzas) and Tiruppalliyēlici (10 stanzas), both included in the Mudalāyiram. Tiruppāṇālvār has only 10 stanzas to his credit in the Mudalāyiram, called Amalanāḍipirān. Tirumaṅgai Ālvār has much to his credit in the Prabandham. He is the author of Periyutirumōli (1084 stanzas), Tirukkurundāṇḍagam (20 stanzas), Tiruneḍundāṇḍagam (30 stanzas), Tiruvelukutṭirukkai (1 stanza) Siriyatirumaḍal and Periyatirumaḍal. The number of stanzas in the last two poems is differently assessed by different scholars. The Kaṇṇinumṣiruttāmbu of Mathurakavi Ālvār and the Nacciyaṛtirumōli (143 stanzas) and the famous Tiruppāvai (30 stanzas) of Āṇḍāl are also included in the Mudalāyiram. The above poems along with the Irāmānujanūttandādi of Tiruvarangattamudanār constitute the 4000 stanzas of the Divyaprabandham. Highest philosophical truths are embodied in these Tamil hymns of the gifted Ālvārs and so these are considered as important for Vaiṣṇava religion as the Upaniṣads; and the two, the Tamil Divyaprabandham and the Sanskrit Upaniṣads are styled Ubhayavedānta. But the most significant point about the literature in the vernacular is that it reveals the greatness of the arcāvatāra or idol-worship. It embodies the spiritual experiences of the Ālvārs in the different temples. In this manner Śrinivāsa has been extolled by nine of the Ālvārs.

The Śaiva religious hymns in Tamil are collectively known as the Tirumurais. They are twelve in number. The Tevāram of Tiruññāna-sambandar, Tirunāvukkarasu (Appar) and Sundar murti constitutes the first seven Tirumurais. Tiruvācakam and Tirukkovayār of Māṇikyavācakar form the eight. Tiruvicaippā and Tiruppallāṇḍu of different authors from the ninth. Tirumūlar's Tirumantram is the tenth. The eleventh consists of 40 poems by 12 authors. Periyapurāṇam (otherwise called Tiruttonḍarpurāṇam) of Sekkilar constitutes the 12th. Here too the glory of the arcāvatāra of Śiva is mainly described. The Tamil hymns are designed to inspire feelings of veneration and love towards God besides presenting valuable truths. The devotional songs of Tāyumānavar and Paṭṭinattār addressed to Śiva are as popular amongst the Śaivites as the psalms of the Nāyanmārs.

Śaivism is embodied in the philosophic system known as Śaiva Siddhānta and Śaiva Siddhānta is therefore called the philosophy of Śaivism and it is traced to the Upaniṣads like Vaiṣṇava Siddhānta. It is chiefly contained in Śivajñāna-bodham by Maikaṇḍan Sivajñānasiddhiyār.

There is a large body of similar religious hymns in the Sanskrit language also. These constitute the Stotra literature. They are small hymns consisting of from one to 100 stanzas in praise of a deity, describing the devotee's absolute surrender to God, admitting his sinful nature and his utter helplessness to attain mukti unless the deity out of His natural and immense mercy pities his condition and redeems him from his career of sins. They reveal the bhakti or devotion of the devotee and his earnest desire for union with God. The number of these devotional hymns is very large and only a few important and early ones can be mentioned here to serve as examples. The stotras by Śaṅkarācārya are significant as they are composed by a philosopher who held that Brahman was formless and attributeless. The Stotraratna of Yāmunācārya comprises 65 stanzas and embodies high philosophical truths. The Gadyatraya of Rāmānuja is an equally important triplex. In the first he seeks the mercy and protection (Śaraṇāgati) of God. In the second he prays to Śrīraṅganātha of Śrīraṅgam. In the third he prays to God to accept him. The Mukundamāla of Kulaśekhara Āḷvār is another famous hymn of forty stanzas. The importance of bhakti or devotion and the mercy of God are clearly brought out in this hymn. Śrīguṇaratnakoṣa is another important hymn of 61 stanzas. Then there are poems praising several arcāvatāras, like, Śrīraṅgarājastava, Śrī Varadarājastava, etc. The Nāmāvalis may also be mentioned here as they help us to meditate upon God by repeating His various names.

The devotional songs of Tyāgarāja in praise of Rāma deserve special mention. The songs of Annamācāryulu on Śrī Veṅkateśvara are full of high devotional fervour.

VARNAS AND ĀŚRAMAS.

Although our religion and philosophy consider mokṣa (beatitude) as the primary object of our desire still they recognise three other objects which are to be attained consistent with the primary one. They are dharma, artha and kāma. These three are collectively known as Trivarga and along with mokṣa, as the caturvarga. These are not only ends in themselves but are also means to the principal object, mokṣa. Dharma is the practical method by which mokṣa can be attained. It regulates the conduct of a person who aims at mokṣa. It may be called a code of Ethics. The underlying principle in our code of Ethics is that one should prefer what is good or meritorious (śreyas) to what is pleasant or pleasurable (preyas). The man who prefers the latter is called ignorant while the man who prefers the former is called wise. The wise man knows that the pleasures of the world are transitory and perishing and that everlasting pleasure is only mokṣa. Even the joys of svarga and Brahmaloka which are gained by sacrifices and tapas are only transitory. So if a man has to attain everlasting joy, he must control his senses and realise his self. This is possible by following the course of dharma. When we follow dharma, we must follow it without any object in view, i.e., for its own sake, dedicating it to God. Then only will it contribute to our good or śreyas. Again dharma includes not only rules of conduct but also principles of character. The latter are more important and produce better results than the former. The former without the latter are ineffective.

Dharma regulates the conduct of man in all aspects of life—religious, social, political and healthy. It is divided into two categories viz., varṇa-dharma and āśrama-dharma. Our religion has divided the society into four classes or varṇas according to the nature and aptitudes of its members and prescribed dharma for each class. Again it has divided man's life into four stages or āśramas and prescribed dharma for each stage. The division of the society into four classes or varṇas is peculiar to our country. For that reason it need not be declaimed or discouraged. It is based on the principle of social economy. So it is prescribed as one of the duties of the king to maintain the varṇa-dharma and āśrama-dharma. If a king is not able to maintain dharma properly, he is described as an incompetent king. He is given power to punish people who do not follow the dharma of their class and state in society.

It is not possible to mention all the varṇa-dharmas and āśrama dharmas here but a few important ones will be noticed. It is the duty of the Brahman to study and teach the Veda, to perform sacrifices for himself and for others, and to give and receive gifts. The first in each pair of duties enumerated above is also prescribed for the Kṣatriya and the Vaiśya. The special duty of a Kṣatriya is to protect the people and their dharma. Agriculture, cattle rearing and trade are assigned to the Vaiśya. The only duty assigned to the Śūdra is to help the other castes in carrying on their duties. In this way, the varṇas specialise in religion, politics, economics and labour according to their station in life, whatever its nature.

In addition to the above social duties, certain religious duties are enjoined, most of which are common to all the castes. These are comprehensively known as the saṁskāras. They are Garbhādhāna or ceremony for conception; Pumsavana or ceremony of wishing a male child; Simantonnayana or ceremonial parting of the hair; Jātakarma or birth rites; Nāmakaraṇa or naming; Annaprāśana or giving solid food to the child; Caula or tonsure; Upanayana or investiture with the sacred thread; and Vivāha or marriage. After Upanayana, the study of the Veda is prescribed and at the end of the Vedic study five more saṁskāras are prescribed. So to the Hindu, life itself is a sacrament from birth to death or conception to cremation. Every act is an adoration of God including the smallest details of life relating to birth, food, study and duties of the family.

In addition to the above saṁskāras which are enjoined once for a life time, there are some others which are to be performed daily or at regular intervals. The daily duties are the performance of the five mahāyajñas viz., brahmayajña or reciting the Veda; pitryajña or oblation to the pitṛs or forefathers; devayajña or worship of God; bhūtayajña or offering havi or food to all creatures; and manuṣyayajña or feeding the guests. The aim of these yajñas is to bring out the solidarity and unity of all living beings, human, super-human and sub-human and the obligations of the house-holder to the world in general owing to his birth and station in life. Then there are the twenty-one sacrifices—7 pākayajñas, 7 haviryajñas and 7 somayajñas—which may be performed some at specific times and others at suitable times, but all at the option of the doer. But śrāddha, one of the pākayajñas, is considered as essential and one who omits it is counted as a patita, because every one owes his life to the parents and progenitors.

The object of these saṁskāras is to make the life of a man spiritual. Our people are of the opinion that man is not on an animal level and should not be guided by the animal instincts of self-preservation and multiplication and feelings of anger, fear and jealousy. Being endowed with mind and reason, he should rise above the animal level and feel that he has come from God and has to return to God and that he should make himself fit for it. He is morally free and not bound by instincts like animals. So he must live and move in a spiritual world and his dress, food and acts must have a spiritual meaning. Every saṁskāra is intended to be an act of purification making the soul more and more fit to approach God. So Upanayana is considered to be the most important saṁskāra as, in it, the man is initiated into the worship of God by means of Vedic stanzas and is invested with the sacred thread in token whereof. Worship of God is the essence of religious life. Marriage is also a spiritual act which enables a man to perform Vedic rites which exalt him spiritually and to continue the race which redeems him from his debt to the fore-fathers. By these saṁskāras, one's life becomes living in and for God.

For this purpose our religion teaches not only the above saṁskāras but also detailed rules of conduct which are ethical aids to spirituality.

Some of these will be defined below. 1. Śauca or śuddhi is keeping the mind, speech and body clean. Keeping the mind clean is to prevent it from lapsing from sattva into rajas and tamas. Keeping the speech clean is not to utter lies or words calculated to cause pain to other beings. 2. Viveka is discrimination between good and bad, between body and soul. 3. Ārjava is identity of purpose between body, speech and mind. 4. Samatva is feeling pleasure and pain at the pleasure and pain of others. 5. Tuṣṭi is being satisfied with what one has. 6, 7. Śama and Dama are controlling the mind and the senses from being attracted by undesirable objects. 8. Dāna is giving to others what one has. 9. Tyāga is renouncing what is not good to oneself. 10. Dayā is pity or sympathy for the suffering of others. 11. Mārdava is association with goodness. 12. Lajjā is moral sensitiveness. 13. Kṣamā is the spirit of endurance or ability to bear pain caused by others, or by extreme cold or heat. Kṣānti and titikṣā are synonymous with this. 14. Dhairya is courage to do one's duties even in the face of extreme danger. 15. Śraddhā is reverence to the elders. This is otherwise called Āstikya. 16. Tapas is physical exercise to make the body fit for religious duties. 17. Sthairya is the will to do one's duty. 18. Vairāgya is the renunciation of sense inclinations. The practise of these good qualities is given preference over the above-named saṃskāras. Even though a man undergoes all the above saṃskāras, it is of no avail if he does not possess these qualities; if, on the other hand, a man possesses these qualities, it does not matter even if he does not undergo some of the saṃskāras.

Hinduism not only insists on the practice of these virtues but also on the avoidance of vices of which the chief are given below. 1. Kāma is the desire for sensual pleasures. 2. Krodha is anger causing pain to others. 3. Lobha is the instinct of possession. 4. Moha is delusion or mistaking one thing for another. 5. Mada is conceit arising from egoistic enjoyment and it causes moral confusion. 6. Mātsarya is envy or jealousy at other's prosperity. 7. Dambha is self-advertisement. 8. Māna is the feeling of superiority to others and insulting them. 9. Pāruṣya is conduct leading to other's displeasure. 10. Ajñāna is ignorance of what is good and what is bad. 11. Ahaṅkāra is egoism expressed in terms of self-elation and the feeling of superiority to others. It includes identification with the body. 12. Mamakāra is the sense of possession or mineness. 13. Pramāda is perversity due to ignorance. 14. Īrṣyā is envy. 15. Asūya is attributing evil to good people. Of these the first six, viz., kāma, krodha, lobha, moha, mada and mātsarya are the chief and are called ariṣadvarga or the six inner enemies of spirituality. Of these again the first three, kāma, krodha and lobha are considered to be more baneful than others. Lastly kāma is the worst of all the enemies as it is the source of all the other vices.

A man's life is divided into four parts and each is called an āśrama. The four āśramas are stages in the pilgrim's progress to God or stages in the process of spirituality. They make the man given to secular life turn his mind towards spiritual life and finally lead to the realization of the supreme Self. The first āśrama is brahmacharya. A man enters brahmacharya at the age of seven or eight. It is the period of study and the whole attention of the student should be absorbed in study at the residence of his teacher (gurukula). Brahman is the Veda as the source of spiritual knowledge and so brahmacharya is the study of the Veda. The highest of all studies is Vedic study. The object of the study is to attain mastery over animal nature. The Brahmachārin has to lead a well-regulated life, practise self-control and observe celibacy. He should be moderate in his food, speech and conduct. He should beg his food and partake as much of it as his teacher prescribes for him. He should avoid excess of salt, acid and pungent substances. He should avoid meat and intoxicating drinks. He should not use scents and flowers. He should not sleep in the daytime. He should not indulge in toilet. He should not drive in carts or coaches. He should not use footwear. He should shun objects that cause kāma, krodha and lobha. He should act with viveka. He should not indulge in music or dancing. He should not find fault with others and should not himself commit faults. He should regularly perform the sandhyāvandana or the worship of God in the Sun as the light of lights. A student is not required to pay for his studies. The Guru is maintained by the state and the tuition is free. He has to acquire knowledge and culture through service and devotion to his teacher. The most essential duty of the student is reverence to the teacher.

Then the student enters into the married life, the stage of his life called gārhaṣṭhya. He should select a fair and suitable bride of a different gotra. Marriage is a sacrament meant for spiritual life and not for sexual and sensual satisfaction and his partner should participate in his pursuit of dharma. Every man is a member of the social organism. He owes his body and mind or psycho-physical make-up to his forefathers, ṛsis and gods and so he has to repay his debt of gratitude to them. The Gṛhaṣṭha has to do his duties and not assert his civic rights. The duty to the forefathers consists in the performance of śrāddha to them and the continuance of the species worthy of the race. The duties of the ṛṣis, lie in the study of the Vedas as they are the Vedic seers of God. The Gods are pleased by Vedic sacrifices and worship. The first and the third can be accomplished only with the assistance of a wife. So marriage is a religious sacrament, according to our people and not a civil affair to satisfy our senses. Not only the above three functions, but also the remaining two of the pañcayajñas can be performed only with the assistance of a wife to look after the house. So our people assigned domestic work as the primary duty to the wife. It is also the duty of a gṛhastha or householder to feed all people who are in need of food, the brahmacārin, the other gṛhasthas who approach him for food, and the sannyāsin who has neither home nor relations, and even the vānaprastha. So every other āśrama depends upon the gṛhasthāśrama for its support as the children depend upon their mother. As a Gṛhastha has to offer bhūta-bali also, even the birds and insects derive support from him. So a Gṛhastha is the main stay of the society and his āśrama is the most humanitarian and therefore the best of the āśramas.

Pañca-yajñas are thus based on the idea of life as an opportunity for service and self-sacrifice and not for sense-enjoyment. It is giving back to the universe what a man has taken from it for self-maintenance.

The next is the vānaprasthāśrama. When a man reaches old age and is subject to dotage and is blessed with a grandson, he should leave the grhasthāśrama and retire to the forest either with or without his wife, after transferring the management of the family to his son and spend his life in contemplation. Retirement to the forest is only for inner spiritual quiet. His food consists of roots, fruits and similar forest products. He practises ascetic self-control by fasts and enduring sufferings. He should also perform the five mahāyajñas. This āśrama is only a training period for the next or sannyāsāśrama or the life of renunciation and contemplation.

The Sannyāsin gives up all sense attractions and attachments and even the celestial pleasures of Svarga. Though he lives in solitude he may enter the city and seek alms for the sustenance of his body. He has no attachments or aversions. He returns love for hatred and lives for others. He is one with God and sees all things in God and God in all things. He is a veritable God on earth. This āśrama is the fruition of the other āśramas and the fulfilment of life. The life of dutifulness ends in the deified life; it is attitude that matters and not the detailed acts. As the Gītā says, whatever a man's station in life, he can get freedom or mukti by doing his prescribed duty without attachment and absolute devotion to God.

Thus though the āśramas appear to be different stages in the spiritual development of man, starting with brahmacarya and ending with sannyāsa, it is held in a larger sense that each āśrama is an end in itself. A man can attain mokṣa by performing his prescribed duties well and without desiring any fruit in any āśrama. Purity of soul, detachment from worldly objects and absolute devotion to God will secure salvation to a man in any stage of life. There are relative duties due to birth, birthplace and social environment and these duties should not be inconsistent with obligatory or optional duties. Every duty is really a worship of the Deity who is the real actor or kartā. He is the act and the actor.

Now coming to the rights and duties of women, there is fundamental difference in our śāstras between puruṣadharma and strīdharmā. Women are always dependent upon men and can never be independent. Women have their share of duties but they are not allowed to discharge them independently. Men too cannot practise dharma independently of women, but the difference is if a man begins to perform a rite, his wife has to co-operate and help him; a woman, on the other hand, cannot undertake to do a work without the permission of her husband. If she does anything against the wishes of her husband, it will turn fruitless. The upshot of all this is that the primary duty of a wife is to follow the wishes of her husband (pativrata). According to our śāstras marriage is a sacrament (samskāra) and not a civil or social affair, and so the marital tie is unbreakable. A woman, once married, cannot desert her husband even if he were addicted to vices or devoid of good qualities. Conversely a man cannot abandon his wife and if he does so he is publicly censured. Husband and wife should be attached to each other for life, and love and be contented with each other.

Although independence has been denied to women in religious duties, she is the mistress of the house. All domestic duties are in her charge and she commands equal respect with her husband in the family—nay more. It is said that the father deserves hundred times more respect than the teacher and the mother thousand times more than the father. A man may abandon his father but he should, under no circumstances, abandon his mother. The wife also deserves equal respect because our śāstras say that a man is born in the form of his son through his wife. As he is born in his wife, she is called his jāyā. Where women are respected, there the Gods rejoice; any rite becomes fruitless if it is done in a place where women are not respected; a woman is the light of the house; she is prosperity incarnate; so says our śāstra.

As there are good deeds to be performed, so there are also bad deeds to be avoided. So the śāstra not only commands us to do certain duties but also prohibits us from committing certain other acts. Just as the good deeds are calculated to produce merit, so the bad deeds or prohibited actions cause sin. Our seers were not only wise enough to lay down certain rules of conduct but were also prudent enough to warn us from doing wicked deeds. These deeds are either harmful to ourselves or to the society. One who does not want to lose his merit or acquire sin, should avoid them. A Grhastha should not covet another man's wife. No man should cause himsā or harm to another. A man of one caste should not encroach upon the duties of another caste, except in cases of dire necessity. One should not utter a lie. There are various prohibitions with regard to food. Generally food which is rājasic and tāmasic should be avoided. It should not excite the senses and animal instincts. It should not lead to slothfulness and apathy. Liquor and stealing are strictly prohibited.

When there are injunctions and prohibitions, it is natural that there should be omissions and commissions, as to err is human. These have to be rectified and this is done by prāyaścittas or self-purifications. The underlying principle is repentance for lapses and sin. A man should feel repentance for what he has done and should benefit by experience. This is brought about by means of the prāyaścittas. The most common form of purification is penance and fasting or physical mortification leading to the purification of the soul. The derivative meaning of prāyaścitta is penance and determination (not to repeat the act). These expiatory ceremonies purify the mind of the person and prevent his spirituality from being lowered by the omissions and commissions. The prāyaścittas are prescribed for slips or unintentional mistakes but not for wilful misdeeds or omissions. There is no atonement for wilful wickedness. The man is doomed for life. In our daily round of duties, we may unwittingly omit some details and we may not be aware of it. In order to ward off the evil effects of such omissions, it is usual to perform an act of atonement for them at the end of every ceremony. Our people are very scrupulous in the discharge of their duties and want to make sure of the merit of the actions. Remorse is vital to virtuous life.

Our system of fasts (vratas) and festivals are calculated to help us in self-purification and development of the sattva character. If sattva increases, we will be free from egoism and resign ourselves to the will of God and attain salvation by His mercy. Fast reduces the force of the material body and enables the spiritual nature to attain ascendancy. Festivals are not simple feasts or dinners. They remind us of the advents of God on earth or commemorate the mighty deeds of God undertaken to purify the world by destroying the wicked and protecting the good, for the redemption of humanity. They are the outward expressions of our gratitude to God for His immense and constant mercy. If we do not express our gratitude to God, we will be guilty of ingratitude for the trouble that He has taken to make us approach Him. Dīpāvalī, for instance, is a day of rejoicing and remembrance of the good that Śrī Kṛṣṇa did to the world by killing the cruel demon, Naraka, on the previous day. Saīkrānti commemorates the release of the world from the clutches of the demon Bali whom Viṣṇu drove away by His prowess. It also demonstrates the immense mercy of the Lord Who pardoned him in spite of his wickedness because he supplicated and who even took upon Himself the burden of protecting him so long as he lived. Another class of festivals is the celebration of the birthdays of the avatāras of God and of saints who have bequeathed to us their wisdom of the things of this world and the worlds beyond.

WOMANHOOD.

The home is the unit of Hindu society and the nursery of its ethical and spiritual life, and the Hindu woman is the pivot of the home, its source and sustenance. If man is the gr̥has̥tha or the householder, woman is the gr̥hiṇī or the owner or maker of the home. There can be no home without a wife or mother. She is the ministering angel of man and the very cradle of family life. Hinduism thus honours the woman as wife and mother as no other religion does.

Marriage is a sacrament and not a civil contract. It is not lust and the gratification of animal instinct but love that links the male and the female as pati-patnī. Wedlock brings out the spontaneity and reciprocity of love, its constancy and irrevocability and the value of spiritual partnership. The domestic life of the woman is not a drudgery but an inner delight arising from her ministering to the husband's needs and the upbringing of the children. As sahadharma-cārīṇī, the wife, with her feminine sweetness and grace, co-operates with her husband in the maintenance of the family as the foundation of the corporate life of the community. She willingly shares the duties of the husband in the performance of his fivefold duties involving gratitude to the forefathers and hospitality to the poor and the needy. Her domestic life is not one of mere passivity and dependence due to feminine receptivity and responsiveness, but she is the queen or mistress of the home and its mainstay and prosperity or Lakṣmī incarnate. As patnī, she often leads the pati in sweetening his masterful will.

Her life of love is enriched by the advent motherhood. Her instinct of self-sacrifice and service are fully brought out in the bearing and rearing of the children, worthy of the gotra and the spiritual tradition. It is motherhood that elicits the infinite spirit of self-denial and affectionate solicitude and is manifested in the fostering of the child by endless privations and patience bordering on martyrdom. The forgiving nature of the mother increases with the prodigalities of the children even if they happen to be prodigal.

Wifehood is, therefore extolled in Hinduism as the symbol and embodiment of Divine Love. The Īśvara-Īśvarī relation of Godhood is a dual-nondual relation of Pārvatī-Parameśvara or Śrīyaḥpati. Īśvara rules by Law and Īśvarī by love and the two are glued together as one. It is Divine Motherhood that is the operative grace of God which consists in forgiveness and the redemption of the sinner from his ways of wickedness. The mother's love is spontaneous and the Divine Mother forgives sins by Her overflowing love.

The love shown by the pati to the patnī is the real property of the woman and it is richer and more enduring than earthly property and material welfare. The work of the woman is not confined to the fostering of domestic felicity as she often takes a leading part in social service like feeding the poor, healing the sick and rearing children and rejoicing in devotional activities. But her feminine nature is essentially suited to the founding of the home and her fundamental right is the right of love which rules the home and society.

CHAPTER VIII

WORSHIP.

Ardent bhakti cannot rest satisfied with silent meditation and upāsanā, especially when it overflows and expresses itself in the form of tears, tremors and trance and as bridal mysticism. Vedic offerings to gods are reinterpreted as Vedāntic offerings to Brahman. Brahman is beyond space and time and is formless. But He has a formless form of His own to respond to the needs of the worshippers and their prayers and praise. Though bhakti is for bhakti's sake, the worshippers often pray for earthly and celestial boons and Bhagavān, as Providence, answers their prayers. Contemplation on the inner self is supremely desirable but it is not what is actually possible for the man of average common-sense. He wants something concrete to fix his mind upon. In His infinite mercy and love, God descends into humanity as arcā or idol. Arcā is not metal or stone symbol but is the permanent incarnation of God and the concretion of His kṛpā. In arcā God is easily accessible to all at any time or in any place. God-hunger for man is more than man's hunger for God and as arcā. He longs for communion with the devotee whom He regards as His very ātman or self. Bhakti and worship or pūjā are the inner and the outer expressions of man's love of God. In His infinite love, He comes down and the mystic ascends to Him by Karma Yoga, Jñāna Yoga and Bhakti Yoga. Arcā is the most accessible form of God for expressing our love through pūjā or worship.

Worship can be offered in a variety of ways. We can worship Him by inner meditation or dhyāna. We can again worship Him by offering flowers, incense, food and drink. We can also worship Him by simply uttering His names. The first method is difficult to practise as it implies the turning of the vision inward. The second is easy and lies within the reach of all people. The third is the easiest and the most efficacious of all. The worship of the idol or arcā is really the worship of the living all-pervading presence of the Lord. The deity responds to our bhakti and out of His grace, reveals His nature in and as arcā. While avatāras are historic incarnations of God that come and go, arcā is the permanent incarnation of God and He is ever accessible to the mystic. God comes to stay in the idol out of His grace and by virtue of our devotion and prayer.

There are two primary methods in the worship of God as Nārāyaṇa, namely, the Pāñca- rātra and the Vaikhānasa. The Pāñcarātra Āgama is the word of Nārāyaṇa Himself and it is a sāttvika religion based on the practice of love. The Vaikhānasa is also of divine origin. The Śaiva Āgamas are traced to Śiva. The Āgamas, therefore, claim the same validity as the Ītihāsas and the Purāṇas.

Worship of God as arcā or image is of two kinds, namely, temple and domestic worship. The former is meant for all and has continuity. It is conducive to the good of the community as a whole. Domestic worship is, however, confined to the householder and his family. Again, there will be homa, bali and utsava in temple worship which are absent in domestic worship. Further there will be multiple images in temples worship.

The Āgamas refer to 96 varieties of temples of which 18 are prescribed for Viṣṇu and the remaining types are meant for other Gods. The essential parts of a temple are the garbhagrha or the sanctum sanctorum, the mukha maṇṭapa or the pavilion in front and the prākāra or the walls surrounding the sanctum for going round it or pradakṣiṇa. The garbhagrha is surmounted by a vimāna or tower and the prākāra is provided with a gate or gopura. The prākāras may vary from one to seven according to the grandeur of the temple.

Five kinds of images are prescribed for temple worship of which dhruva, the static aspect, and utsava, the dynamic aspect, are the most important. The images are of three types, viz., the sthānaka or the standing posture, the āsana or the sitting posture and the śayana or the lying down posture. Each of these kinds may be of the yoga or the serene type, the bhoga or the blissful and the vīra or the heroic.

The Āgamas furnish detailed instructions regarding the planning and construction of temples as regards position, size and the measurements of the vimāna and other parts of the temple. Just as the body is a living temple of God and the heart is His shrine, so the town is modelled on a spiritual plan with the temple at the centre. In addition to the temple to the ādimūrti or the chief God there may be temples for the other incarnations of God, the Ālvārs, Nāyanmārs and the Ācāryas. The whole temple is pervaded by a religious atmosphere in which work is elevated into worship and worship is raised to the philosophical and spiritual level.

The festivals conducted in a temple are for the benefit of the community as a whole and they are of two kinds, the periodic and the occasional. While the devotee seeks the mūlavar or the God within, the utsavar, as the giver of grace, seeks the devotees outside and bestows His blessings on them. In addition to the periodic festivals, like those at the time of the full moon or the equinoxes, festivals may be performed at any time out of devotion or desire to ward off evils in times of drought or cosmic calamities. The duration of the festivals may vary from one to 15 or 30 days. A flag is hoisted in the temples to indicate the course of the festival; and it is lowered at the end of the same. Once the flag is hoisted, none may leave the town until it is lowered. This indicates that the festival is for the benefit of the people. It is laid down that devotional festivals should be performed in the afternoon.

Great care is taken for maintaining the purity or security of the temple. God is pure and perfect. Expiatory ceremonies are prescribed for the slightest act of impurity. The underlying idea is that God who is essentially pure and free from all kinds of taints, withdraws His presence from places polluted in the slightest degree as unfit for His stay. The devotee should go into it with pure body and mind. Cleanliness leads to godliness and only the pure in heart can reach God. Certain ceremonies are performed to purify the atmosphere of the temple if it is made impure. Expiatory ceremonies are prescribed for the entry of impure persons and animals into the temple.

Even the appearance of fungus and anthills inside the temple is considered to be a fit occasion for expiation. Expiatory ceremonies are also described for portents which forestall evil to the country.

Bhārata Deśa is the birth place of universal religion and is the holy land of the avatāras, Ṛṣis, Āḷvārs, Nāyanmārs, Ācāryas and other seers of God. The birth place of avatāras and godly men is called a kṣetra or sacred place sanctified by their advent in the interests of spiritualising humanity. Mother India has infinite capacity to produce godly men and is therefore worshipped as perpetually young though she has given birth to a countless number of sages and saints through the ages. The Vedāntins seek Brahman as the supreme Deity or sat or as the cosmic Lord or Īśvara; the mystics seek Him as the indwelling Self but all religious people adore the avatāra, historical or permanent, in the kṣetras of which seven are said to be the chief. Ayodhyā is the birth place of Śrī Rāma; Mathurā, Gokula and Bṛndāvana are associated with the līlā of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Kāśī is the heart of spiritual India. Kāñcī is held sacred as the chief salvation giving city of India.

Areā is worshipped in five forms of which the most important is svayamvyakta like Tirupati.

The Lord in His infinite mercy incarnates here and is the very embodiment of redemptive love for all jīvas. He summons all jīvas from the hill-top to seek His feet and attain His grace. Other kṣētras are Srirangam, Puskaram, Melkote and Naimisam. Kanci is a divyakṣetra to Varada consecrated by Brahma. Trivellore is an ārṣa kṣetra consecrated by a Ṛṣi. A mānuṣa kṣetra is established by a good man. Temples whose origin is not thus known are called purāṇa kṣētras and most temples come under this heading. Śaiva kṣētras also conform to type and Śiva dwells as the five elements, earth, water, fire, air and ether of which the most important is Chidambaram, permeated by cit. The pilgrim's progress, external but symbolical to the Vaiṣṇavites and the Śaivites, is from Badarināth and Kedāranāth in the north, to Kāśīnāth, Mathurānāth and Ayodhyānāth in the centre, to Paṇḍarīnāth and Dvārakānāth in the west, to Jagannāth in the east and to Venkaṭanāth, Kāñcīnāth, Raṅganāth and Rāmanāth in the south. The pilgrim then enters into the inner shrine and ascends to eternity.

Tīrthas are tanks or rivers, the waters of which are considered to be holy on account of their association with some holy place or saint. Physical cleanliness is next to spiritual purity and godliness. Every kṣetra has a tīrtha attached to it, a bath in which is said to cleanse our sins. Our Śrīnivāsa kṣetra has in it Svāmipuṣkariṇī. All should bathe in it and purify themselves before approaching the presenee of God. The Gaṅgā is holy because it is said to have descended from Heaven and issued out of the feet of Viṣṇu. It was brought down by the severe penance of King Bhagīratha to remove the sins of the ten thousand sons of Sagara and send them to Heaven. The Godāvarī and the Kāverī are equally sacred.

Pilgrimages to holy places are symbolic of the pilgrimage of the soul to God. The end and aim of our life is the pilgrimage of the soul to God, the home of all eternal values like truth, goodness and beauty. Pilgrimages to kṣetras enable the devotee to shed his prejudice due to the accidents of birth and station and long for His soul-sight. He attains vairāgya or the virtue of self-renouncement by minimising his wants and acquiring sāttvic endurance and patience. Contact with holy men fosters the spirit of human kinship and the kinship of souls leading to spiritual service. The great Ālvārs, Nāyanmārs and Ācāryās, therefore, took to pilgrimage from the Himālayas to the Setu to promote devotion in themselves and others.

CHAPTER IX

SĀDHANAS.

The puruṣārthas or chief ends of life outlined in the next chapter have a religious value. Dharma, artha and kāma are not ends in themselves; they lead to the supreme end called mokṣa puruṣārtha. Mokṣa is freedom from avidyā and karma which bind the ātman to the world of saṁsāra. The ātman really belongs to God but somehow he has identified himself with the body made of twenty-four tattvas of prakṛti from time immemorial. Owing to this materialistic view he is subject to the changes of prakṛti and therefore to the cycle of births and deaths, pleasures and pains. At long last he comes to know that he has given up his permanent home in God, banished himself from God, became a wanderer in saṁsāra and therefore he longs to return to his home. God as the self and the saviour of souls also longs for reunion. It is in this light that the teaching of the Gītā as the book of yogic *sādhana*s is to be understood. Yoga is union with God and each yoga stresses this union. The chief yogas are Karma yoga, Rāja yoga, Jñāna yoga and Bhakti yoga including Prapatti. They are generally arranged as steps in a ladder and every sect or system has its own way of attainment. There is another view that each yoga is independent and leads directly to mukti. In this work, the view of Śrī Vaiṣṇavism is adopted and karma, jñāna and bhakti are treated as different stages in the pilgrimage to God. The will is first disciplined, then thought and finally feeling as bhakti is stressed. Prapatti is the easiest way to God as He Himself becomes the way and the end and mukti is thus attained by the grace of God.

Karma yoga is a moral discipline by purifying the will. Its object is to change kāmya karma into niṣkāma karma or duty for duty's sake. No man can be without doing karma and karma includes thought, speech and overt action. Every man as a bodily self ordinarily follows his animal inclination or desire for sense-objects. He not only seeks sense-pleasures but also desires some outside ends like success (jaya), profit (lābha) and name and fame. These are called kāmya karmas because they are based on the desire of the person for sense-objects and sense-pleasures. Such ends are not desirable morally as they make the person the slave of sensibility. Besides, kāmā leads to krodha or anger when the desire is not achieved; anger leads to confusion and moral death. Therefore, the Gītā prescribes the way of niṣkāma karma as the way of moral life. Karma is done because it is impossible to be without doing it. But it ought to be done without caring for the fruits or consequences, as niṣkāma karma. It is duty for duty's sake. Then the karma yogin is not a slave of the senses, but is a victor thereof. Every man has a station in life and some duties pertaining to it. He ought to do them as duties irrespective of the consequences. He may succeed or fail, derive pleasure or suffer from pain; he should not care for them.

Karma has three meanings. In the scientific sense, every karma is an effect and it follows from a cause or set of causes. It also determines the future action. In this way it becomes a continuous series; and the theory may lead to fatalism. No man can escape his past and he is the slave of destiny. In a higher or moral sense, karma is the action of a kartā and the kartā is morally free; he has the will to shape his future, according to his conviction. But when once the action is done, he cannot escape its consequences. What a man sows, that he reaps and the moral law of retribution works with mathematical precision. Good deeds are never lost, so also bad deeds, and it is the deeds that determine a man's character. But if karma is done by him as niṣkāma karma, he is free as he does not care for the fruits. The law of kāmya karma does not bind him. Virtue is its own reward; it has its own intrinsic values and character shines by itself. In a still higher sense, namely, the religious sense, every karma is the worship of God and then karma is done as kainkarya or work dedicated to Him. The karmayogin now says: "Not I, but Thou, oh Lord" and does his work as worship of God, "sarvam kṛṣṇārpaṇam." Īśvara is the real kartā or actor in individual and social life. No doubt, the body, the senses, the mind and the soul more than all contribute to karma. But Īśvara is the ultimate agent and is the means and the end. In this sense, karma yoga is a direct way to mukti, but it is developed only in the final stage of religious life.

Rāja Yoga is mind-control (cittavṛtti nirodha) and is a royal path to Brahman or God. The mind is ordinarily fleeting and frittered and it is the aim of the yoga to collect it and centre it in God. It is therefore a psychological method as different from the moral method of karma yoga. This yoga consists of eight stages, namely, yama, niyama, āsana, prāṇāyama, pratyāhāra, dhāraṇa, dhyāna and samādhi. Purity of body and mind are essential to the practice of this yoga. The first four stages refer to the cleansing of the body and breath--control. The next four stages refer to mind-control. At last, the mind expands, attains samādhi and śānti or peace. This expansion is explained in two ways both physically and mentally. It is the ascent of spiritual energy in the centres of the body from mūlādhāra in the lowest part of the spinal cord to Sahasrāra in the brain. From the mental point of view there is expansion of consciousness from the lowest stage to the highest state. There is expansion from the unconscious to the sub-conscious and the conscious to the super-conscious state of samādhi. The Yogin can acquire siddhis or miraculous powers like entering into the bodies of others and acquiring control over nature. But such siddhis are real obstacles to spiritual life and union with God, and they should therefore be given up. The chief value of this yoga is that it teaches us the way to self-knowledge and self-sovereignty.

Jñāna yoga is the philosophic method of enquiry into the nature of the Ātman and its relation to Brahman. It is not merely an intellectual but also a spiritual enquiry based on viveka, vairāgya and abhyāsa. By means of viveka, the yogin or philosopher distinguishes between the ātman that is eternal and the bodily self that is fleeting. By vairāgya he renounces the false feeling that he is the body and tries to give up egoity or ahaṅkāra. Abhyāsa consists in the practice of contemplation on the ātman. At last he attains ātmajñāna or self-realisation; he attains śānti. But such jñāna is only a stage and not a stopping place. It should lead to Brahmajñāna or God-realisation. Advaita gives a different meaning to jñāna yoga and gives it the highest place among the yogas. It says that the jīva and Īśvara are identical and the consciousness of this identity is jñāna. But in the religious path, bhakti is higher than jñāna.

Bhakti yoga is the practice of devotion to God or Bhagavān. God is super-personal and not impersonal or nirguṇa or arūpa. As Rāmānuja says in the beginning of his Śrī Bhāṣya to the Brahma Sūtras, Brahman is the creator, sustainer and destroyer of the universe and His rulership is a līlā of love for saving souls. The Brahman of the Upaniṣads is Lord Śrīnivāsa who is divinity as dayā. The practice of bhakti according to him consists of seven stages, namely, viveka, vimoka, abhyāsa, kriyā, kalyāṇa, anavasāda and aṇuddharṣa. Briefly explained, they consist in taking sāttvic food, giving up desires for the objects of the senses, practice of the presence of God, performance of the duties as ordained in Śāstra, practice of virtues like truth and hospitality and freedom from the extreme feelings of elation and depression. The bhakta is initiated by the guru into upāsanā or meditation on Brahman as Śrīyaḥpati or Lord and Śrī in the light of the mūlamantras. Bhakti then becomes intense as paramabhakti and it becomes a thirst for divine union as in the case of Nammālvār. The bhakta may be a servant of God or dāsa like Hanumān, a friend of God like Arjuna; he may cherish motherly love as Yaśodā or Perīālvār did for the divine child Kṛṣṇa, or may yearn for love like a nāyaki for her Lord as Āṇḍāl did.

Bhakti yoga is Love lit by jñāna and a rigorous path which only the twice-born can follow. An easier method is adopted by Śrī Vaiṣṇavism and it is called prapatti. Bhagavān is Śrīyāḥpati, the Lord of redemptive grace. He has incarnated as Rāma and Kṛṣṇa and is sarvalokaśarāṇya, the redeemer of all jīvas. He is rakṣaka or śarāṇya as taught in the classic text of prapatti "Renounce all *dharma*s and take refuge at My feet. I will release you from all sins." Six conditions are laid down for prapattiyoga. The yoga consists on the whole in deathless faith in the saving grace of God and absolute surrender to Him in a spirit of contrition and humility and inner purity. Grace is said to be got by him whom God chooses as self surrender is not of the nature of a cause. Whatever it is, prapatti is for all irrespective of caste, creed, sex or profession and is therefore universal. The chief mantra for prapatti is dvaya which means refuge at the feet of Lord and Śrī. The classic example of prapatti is that of Nammālvār, the super-prapanna of Śrī Vaiṣṇavism who surrendered himself to the mercy of Śrīnivāsa with Śrī as His Heart, and was blessed with mukti. All sects in India are, as it were, pilgrims to the Divine dayā in the holy Hill of Tirumalai. The Hill is sacred to the followers of Madhva who insist on service to Viṣṇu as the chief means and end of religion. .

The Śaivite defines Śiva, his supreme God, as Love and refers to four ways, caryā, kriyā, yoga and jñāna as means to the attainment of Śiva. They correspond to the four yogas of Vedānta. Even the followers of Śaṅkara accept the existence of a Personal God for all practical purposes and the need for His grace. Thus all Hindus have faith in Brahman as personal God and seek with the aid of a guru His mercy to attain mokṣa or sāyujya which is outlined in the next chapter.

CHAPTER X

PURUSĀRTHAS.

Every animal pursues an end but man alone is conscious of the end. Man has reason or viveka and he is also morally free and a kartā. His consciousness of the end or purpose is called puruṣārtha; it is his aim of life or goal. Man's physical needs are food, water, fire, air and clothing, i.e., they are for the preservation of his body. He seeks pleasures and their continuance and avoids pains. Hinduism has analysed all the chief ends of life and classified them into four broad kinds. They are called dharma, artha, kāma and mokṣa. They may be rendered in English as the ethical, the economic, the hedonistic or pleasure-seeking and the religious ends of life. They are not, however, exclusive. They all lead to the super-end of life, namely, mokṣa.

Dharma or righteousness is the ethical end of life. Hinduism gives the practice of dharma the first place among the puruṣārthas as no man can take a moral holiday. Right conduct is the whole of life and the other ends of life should also be righteous. Buddhism and Jainism also insist on the need for the practice of dharma. But they do not recognise and realise that goodness has its final meaning only in godliness. God is good by nature and the highest good is godliness, to be attained through the Śāstra. So morality or dharma has its full meaning in religion or Śāstra which prescribes the duties that ought to be done. They are called vidhis. They are righteousness in practised acts. Dharma is righteousness in action and is the essence of duty and it consists in reverence to parents, teachers and sages; truthfulness, charity, courage and kindness to all creatures. It includes the performance of the five yajñas or sacrifices to the devas and pitrs above, to men and lower animals. It brings out the solidarity of the universe and the need for mutual helpfulness. The violation of these duties is adharma and entails sin or pāpa. Adharma includes evil and sin; it is evil in the moral sense and sin in the religious sense as it is the violation of a Divine Law. By doing the acts of dharma, the general attitude of dharma or righteousness is attained. A man then becomes a dharmavān like Dharmaputra and is like Rāma, the very incarnation of righteousness on earth. Śrī Rāma practised truthfulness (satya), devotion to vows, kindness to all creatures and self-control. He subordinated artha and kāma to the discipline of dharma. Dharma is thus the very essence of duty for duty's sake.

Artha is an end of life which is both desired and desirable. A student who finishes his studies or academic life should enter on the life of a householder or gṛhastha. He ekes out his livelihood by doing hard and honest work for the maintenance of his family and others. Wealth is not an end in itself and the miser who hoards his wealth for the sake of wealth is rightly condemned as an adharmavān and anti-social. The householder should be hospitable, helpful to the needy and do his duty to the devas and pitṛs as the whole world is one. There is really no difference between individual and secular or laukika duties and special or spiritual or vaidika duties as every duty is finally an offering to the deity. Karmas are of three kinds, viz., nitya karmas or daily duties like sandhyā, naimittika karmas or occasioned duties like ceremonies to pitṛs and kāmya karmas or optional works. While the first two are obligatory, the third is optional.

Kāma is the attainment of the pleasures of life and is the third puruṣārtha. When a man desires children, health or wealth, he does certain karmas or yajñas to please the devas and gets the desired boons. People pray to God for boons and He grants their prayers. Kāmya karmas are on the whole for enjoying the pleasures of life here and in Svarga. But they are trivial and transient. Therefore a wise man should renounce these pleasures and seek eternal happiness which is only in mokṣa.

Kaiṅkarya or social and spiritual service to all jīvas is work raised to the level of worship of God. The great devotees of God like the Ālvārs and the Ācāryas sought God in all beings and all beings in God and raised the idea of service to the level of kaiṅkarya. Self-surrender to God is the highest puruṣārtha or supreme end of conduct. God is the fulfilment of all the puruṣārthas, as He is sarvakāma or all-desire and sarvaśaṅya, the refuge of all.

The mumukṣu who seeks mukti by following *sādhana*s or *yoga*s at last attains it. The term mokṣa means freedom from saṁsāra or the ills of life due to avidyā and karma. It is freedom from the cycle of births and deaths to which the embodied jīva, or baddha as he is called, is subject. The word mukti is negative as it means that there is no return to this world of saṁsāra. But it has also a positive meaning as it refers to the ascent of the freed jīva to the world of Brahman beyond space and time. Mokṣa is the attainment of Brahman by knowing whom everything is known. According to Rāmānuja, following the Upaniṣads, the Sūtras and the Gītā, the mukta freed from the body, ascends gloriously by the arcirādi path or devayāna, led by a Divine guide to Vaikuṇṭha beyond this world and the world of the devas. When the body dies, the mumukṣu has a glimpse of the Brahmanāḍī. This nāḍī throws light on the path and he soars gloriously to Vaikuṇṭha, through the shining regions of Indra, Sūrya and other Devas, crosses the river Virajā and goes beyond. He is freed from avidyā and karma and the subtle body by bathing in the purifying waters of Virajā. Then he reaches Vaikuṇṭha, sees Brahman face to face, attains union with Him and enjoys eternal bliss. Though the language used by the Upaniṣad in this ascent and attainment is the earthly language of space, time and sensibility, it is really beyond human description. Vaikuṇṭha is beyond space and time, mind and body and Brahman has a formless form, is eternal, ever self-shining and blissful. The mukta becomes one with Him and is immortal and ever blissful. He no longer returns to this world of karma and is no longer bound by prakṛti or kāla. In the state of bliss he is one with Brahman though he exists as a distinct entity. The muktas are spiritually united and as they are free, their desires are at once fulfilled. They may serve the Lord without any taint of egoity and serve each other and fulfil the redeeming purpose of the Lord who longs to make the other bound jīvas muktas. On the whole it is impossible to describe the bliss of Vaikuṇṭha.

He who experiences it alone can explain it. The followers of Madhva separate good from evil and assert that the good jīva or devotee of Viṣṇu goes to Vaikuṇṭha and serves Him there for ever and that the wicked is hurled into everlasting Hell. The Śaivite has faith in Śiva as the supreme good and by following the saint's path, he attains, after death, the world of Śiva or Kailāsa. The Advaitin says that mukti is possible even in this life and it is jīvanmukti or identity of jīva and Īśvara. He, however, admits gradual release by ascending to the world of Viṣṇu.

All Hindus have faith in the four yogas and freedom from saṁsāra with the grace of God.

CHAPTER XI

RELIGION AND SOCIETY.

Man is a social creature as well as an individual seeker. He is therefore a person who seeks the four puruṣārthas as an individual, and as a social creature he participates in the strivings of all the rest of the community. He has social ties which he cannot shake off. There are natural instincts of social activity such as co-operation and working for group unity and welfare. Hinduism recognizes both the individual and the social aspects of each person within the community even as it recognizes the physical and the material and the spiritual aspects of every individual. Just as his efforts are to be for the realisation of himself as spiritual, so also his social activities must be directed towards his realisation of unity or brotherhood with all the members of the community.

Hinduism is most catholic. Its one-pointed effort has always been towards the realisation of social unity amid differences. Through its formulation of the metaphysical principle of one Īśvara who is worshipped in different forms and names, it had kept up the ideal of religion as the realisation in the life of each of its members of the Īśvara so as to create a common or one Humanity. Hinduism does not appeal merely to the heart or to the head but to something more valuable. It appeals to the soul, the spiritual nature in each individual. It appeals to the godhead concealed in the heart of every creature. It teaches the Life Divine, which is the dwelling in God and for God in His world. This is the goal of Hinduism. This promises for each individual the triple aims of the spiritual life, a life of liberty, a life of righteousness or law, and a life of love for all creation that verily belongs to God.

Hinduism is a supreme socialising and divinising force. It is not anti-social or unsocial like some religions. It has meaning for man here in this world. It treats the world as a great field of God's play in which all individuals must take part and act with understanding according to rules or dharma prescribed in the play to each part.

The Hindu religion has carefully analysed the structure of society, its divisions of functions and periods of maturation, growth, development, and ripening of each individual. In other words, its division of castes depends upon the functions and its division of āśramas depends upon the stages of man in a society. It is true that these are given a fuller and profounder significance in some cases, though it is a fact that these divisions cannot be treated to be water tight compartments. Pure types and pure functions are difficult to find in any society. The individual in religion discovers a new set of values for the terms liberty, law and love, (mokṣa, dharma and kāma), meanings which are impossible to get in the purely political society. A society composed as it is of various degrees of intelligence and capacity and personality, does not grasp the full significance of this discovery of religious consciousness. None the less, religion does help to integrate or unify the triple goals of liberty, law and love. To the lower nature these mean license, power and lust for things. But sublimated by Religion they become wonderful expressions of the nature of the soul or spirit.

The social life of man becomes transfigured and civilised by the sublimated direction given to all the activities of the ordinary man. The teachings and the practices of the masters of Hinduism are directed to the civilising of man, by taming his lower nature which revels in egoism and competition, jealousy and greed, violence and hatred. Religion being a higher power or force of the new dimension of the personal and social life seeks mastery over the past vital life of man. In Hinduism it is sought in full conformity with the triple principles of liberty, law and love. That it has not been successful in Hinduism in a larger measure than we would like it to be only shows that generally there has been a stepping down of the ideals of religion everywhere. Religions become rigid and tend to repeat the mistakes of passion and greed of the lower levels on the higher levels of social and spiritual action and thus step down the force of the true impulse.

Hinduism unlike other religions which took up the competitive path, has sought to tame even the enthusiasm of the knowers of other religions by its wide catholicity in spirit to the truths expounded by them. It has disarmed them all, both within India and without by means of its peaceful approach. The twin-notes of Hinduism, struck not once only in the history of India, are peace (Śānti) and knowledge (Jñāna), peace through knowledge and knowledge through peace. A social life which is based on these two principles or ideals, would tend to exhibit a higher state of civilisedness and culture than one based on comfort or security or even salvation.

The individual must be re-made in the spiritual manner. This requires on the part of every individual the recognition of the world as a divine world, a world not based on chance or chaos but a cosmos. A lawful world is the ideal.

of a rational creature. As we have seen dharma is the conception of the law behind the world and all actions or karmas which are performed properly and selflessly and without seeking fruits are individually emancipating and socially good. Good performance of actions or karma yoga itself leads to Brahmānubhava or God-experience. By moral action Hinduism means all such actions as are done without seeking fruits and according to dharma laid down by tradition, spiritual insight and great seers. Such actions have the characteristic of social good, because the socially evil actions are mostly self-seeking and egoistic actions. It is true that Hinduism also pleads for the performance of actions which are neither personally good nor socially good, neither personally evil nor socially evil but only actions which have the sanction of God (dharma), for human individuals and societies have not yet arrived at a knowledge of what is their good or evil. It is above their comprehension. Faith in the śāstras alone matters in duty, for it leads to the transcendental good which is ultimately both personal and social good.

The political life of a people reflects the moral and social qualities of its members. A society in the full sense of the term is a political society with its State and other organisations which ensure freedom for the members and rights of each. In modern times the State has taken over the organisations which have to cater to the needs of the members. Socialisation and Nationalisation of the organisations which have previously been run by individuals is not a little due to the awakening of men to their social and spiritual needs of liberty and rights and duties. This awakening is really due to the religious teachings of great men, who had taught reverence for life and rights of each member. It is religion in India that taught the triple truths of liberty of the individual as a goal, of law which is administered equally, that is, in the interests of the poor and the rich alike, the high and the low, and love for all, love which is expressed by acts of kindness and protection, in times of disease and distress, famine and drought.

The grand truths of religions alone inspired the great work of social amelioration of the conditions of life. The social dynamics of modern States is inspired, whether in a materialistic or socialistic State, by the spiritual principles of dharma, mokṣa and kāma, law, liberty and love, and karuṇā or sympathy. The practical idealism of religion in Hinduism would extend this to the animals also. Humanitarianism extends to animals also which form part of the economy of the State. The aim of true religion as Hinduism, is to make individuals who would in all their secular activities or even in secular matters bring to bear the triple principles or apply them as standard to conduct. Similarly to apply these principles to social or political legislation is the natural extension of rāja-dharma. Rāja-dharma must improve and make possible the svādharma of its members. It may correct and quicken the pace of transformation of the lower and selfish qualities by socialising man and bring the restraints of law to bear on the unlawful or otherwise not-real nature of the individuals. But it ultimately exists for the realisation of real mokṣa and svārājya.

The modern State endeavours to fulfil all the functions of Religion because it has taken over the ideals of religion as its own ends. But while it may help the conditions for the growth and happiness of all its members, while it may give them a sense of freedom from want and restrain in matters particularly physical and social, it cannot compel men to be good except on pain of punishment. It can instil fear and by this threat many members are likely to be restrained from doing unsocial activities. There is however a great danger in this development. Force hinders rather than helps self-growth. A state taking over the functions of the spiritual evolution may defeat it. Instead of being a hindrance to hindrances it may tend to become a great hindrance.

Religion is helpful positively and not merely negatively. It makes for a change of heart. Men of religion are sought after for the solution of personal problems, which are not capable of being attended to by psychiatrists and doctors of medicine. Human problems go beyond the temporary, social and personal life. Peace is sought after and spiritual men who have found peace within and comprehended the truths of both the here and the hereafter help to secure peace within. Man is more than a social and physiological creature. His problems of death and life baffle the intellect and no state or its organisations can help to solve these problems. Religion alone promises to solve them and it does it in its own unique way. These problems are not social problems except indirectly. The State must know its limitations in this direction. Any state that attempts to dismiss the connection of these fundamental problems which harass the souls of its members by edicts of the kind that have been issued in countries dominated by purely national, socialistic or materialistic ideologies, is bound in the long run to break up the State itself. The State or even Society cannot become God or the sole object of loyalty because it cannot satisfy the deepest impulse of the soul for the knowledge of itself completely. Real mokṣa is sought after and it means not liberty for getting goods and satisfactions or the liberty before the eye of law and right to equal opportunity but the liberty to be freed from the cycle of births and deaths, and the terror of constant birth and death.

Religion supplies this and it alone can supply this. Spiritual pain is verily different from all other kinds of pain and fear. It cannot be assuaged by any offer of worldly wealth, or divine pleasures of even the rigid life of dharma. Great men have thrown away empires for the sake of freedom from all these. The artha and kāma puruṣārthas are tuccha. A world dominated by them is a delusion, a snare. Man should seek to get out of them, free himself from them. But such a freedom is difficult without the opening of the soul to real light. Teachers of religion know how to help these men. The preservation of religious texts and institutions facilitates the seeker of liberation on his path. Inner illumination or desire needs the support of the religious literature and methods. The company of the good or knowers of the path of inner discovery shower peace and prepare the conditions for one's own growth. Freedom becomes meaningless to a soul that has need of solace and peace. This peace is granted by God and one feels free in His presence freed from the pains and struggles and conflicts of his personality and community. Temples and Maths offer this atmosphere, but then these must have men who have devoted themselves and are devoting themselves to their self-discovery and God-realisation. Love or sympathy pervades the atmosphere of the āśramas, the retreats of the good men of spirit. These too serve mankind. Though a Yogin or religious man is one who retires from the world, yet does he serve those who need his company by his very peace, the inward peace which no State can ensure for him. Hinduism realises that all types of men should have freedom for this realisation. It does not believe in one universal panacea for all diseases of the body and brain and heart or soul. The religious man or spiritual saint and mystic is an important person, who, though not of the world lives and moves and has his being in God, casts peace on all mankind, gives to those who can listen the nectar of spiritual peace, and a sanctuary for the haunted soul, afraid and sorrowing. Love begins to be available to all whoever feels that the world is a terrible place to live in. He shows the new way of transformation of a world diseased. Wherever he is, because of his universal nature, he begins to inspire all with faith and love and hope.

The spiritual activities which are the special province of Religion and religious associations can never be taken over by the State as part of its general functions. A secular State or a welfare

State may seek to distribute equitably the goods of the world on the principle of greatest happiness of the greatest number. The qualitative distinction of the spiritual good can indeed never become part of the quantitative goods of the social and economic or hedonistic order (artha and kāma). It is true in these spheres the right distribution which is equitable distribution between all the members of the world society or nation is the legitimate method. Equitableness of the distribution of the goods however, is only part of the right or dharma with which a State is charged. There are and have been other criteria of rightness than equitableness of distribution. Freedom can never be distributed though security can perhaps be. Even a theocratic state (such as Pakistan in modern times) cannot but create conditions of freedom or growth to happen in a particular manner. But in attempting this there happens the socialisation of the religious consciousness which is not always an unmixed good. But it helps the awareness of the need for greater and greater enlightenment in matters pertaining to personal liberty. An ordered or self-disciplined liberty is the aim of liberty, or else mokṣa would become meaningless. There is in every soul an elemental need for the inner discovery of God which has most often been achieved in spite of outside social action and society. This need is other than the peace, the comfort and the security that man gets out of the socialisation of human action. There is great truth in the dictum that the individual is greater than the society to which he belongs, though he is inseparable from it. But he belongs to something greater than humanity itself, namely to God, for the goal of man is the eternal and the immortal sense of existence which nothing less than God can grant. God is the Ultimate goal, transcendent to the goals of the world and the State, and all others have meaning and value only in relation to Him.

The ideal of a secular State does not mean that the state is to be or ought to become anti-religious. It is the affirmation of the principle that the State does not seek to take over the functions of religion, organized or unorganized, institutionalised or non-institutionalised. This does not mean that the State permits the religious institutions to do what they please. In those activities which interfere with the sound canons of social life and peace, the State is the authority; in matters of proper administration of religious institutions even the State holds itself free to legislate within the limits of its competence, though this is a difficult pose.

The one truth that we learn from religion and philosophy is that though we can distinguish aspects in human behaviour and can even investigate those aspects and form different sciences, we can never separate them. They are organic to each other. There are people or rather scientists who discovered the economic man, the political man, the religious man, the aesthetic man and so on. On the basis of this, sciences such as economics, sociology, political science, religious science and aesthetics have come into being; very useful within limits, they always tend to apply their laws or hypotheses beyond limits as if man was exhausted by each one of them. This has led in modern times to very lopsided developments. Man has been forgotten by the sciences. Man is more than all that the different sciences have made of him. These several aspects are properties of man's rationality, that quality or dharma or guna, which realises itself in the several activities in which he engages. Thus the organization of this personality is the aim of his own life, but it is not possible through any particular mechanism of any social order or the State. The State should remember that the individual is more than the sum of his social and economic and legal life. Religion also should remember that its serious purpose is the discovery of the inward reality in each individual which it must help by giving it freedom and flexibility and the environment necessary for such a great thing as individual realisation, which is also the fulfilment of the society of which he continues to be a member. The State must protect the sanctity of the environments of those who have out of their own will chosen the path of discovery of the self and help them to go on, even as it has striven to keep the theoretical and investigating scientists free from the common gaze. The realisations of saints would not be, as the past history of culture has shown, less influential and beneficent than the contributions of scientists to society. Protection then of the religious spirit, even an ardent effort to keep the seekers from the daily interference in their lives on one plea or other, would greatly help the very nature of the individuals. But its violation ultimately would threaten the solidarity of the society. The greatness of the State lies in its serving the diverse interests of the individuals. Religion is as profound and basic impulse and need for each individual at some period or other as any other.

Hindu Religion is a force that makes for culture and social cohesion based on love and not on brute might or social coercion. It is something that makes life livable. It is not an escapist phenomenon, but a profound influence or tendency which makes man strive to know what he is.

Helped by philosophical thought which it sets into action, it seeks clarity and fulness for all. But it is necessary to weed out its extra-religious activities, which could well be attended to by the State. Religion can influence the State only through the lives of its members, or the persons who constitute the Government, who imbued with religious principles would put into practice these principles through the social apparatus and organisation. The State by itself must remain secular, not taking sides with religions which have different loyalties. Herein comes a distinction, which it is necessary to draw, between religion and religions. Mankind is yearning for Religion but not for religions. Institutional religions serve religion but slightly. The goal is the religious spirit. No religion does this so well as Hinduism. It has institutions but not an institution which can speak for Hinduism. Hinduism lives in its members, in and through the practice and tradition of its saints and seekers. The grand catholicism of Hinduism is evidenced by the living interest in the cultivation of all sādhānās and yogās among its people. Śrī Vaiṣṇavism of Śrī Rāmānuja has absorbed the religious and mystic traditions of all the best so that the individuals may grow through the inner tradition of religion and mysticism. It too tried to leaven the life of the society by the eternal assurance of divine presence among men, in the form of the Arcāvatāra of Śrī Veṅkateśvara. All great thinkers and saints have accepted this fact that the world must be made fit for the residence of God, and the Kingdom of God on earth. Reform of the earth life, and the social life of its individuals, if need be a revolution in the ways of social life, were envisaged by St. Śaṭhakopa in his divine Hymns, the Tiruvāymoli. The goal of religion is the transformation of man from the seeker of wealth and desire without restraint into a man who is the knower of law, liberty or true freedom, and secondly to make the society which is at present competitive and restrictive, into a divine society where all relationships would be based on love that is born out of the wisdom that all are children of the one Supreme Lord and that it is the real expression of one's nature.

CHAPTER XII

CONCLUSION.

Hinduism is a universal religion because it affirms the existence of God as not only God beyond the world but as the inner Love in all jīvas. Every one can seek Him and see Him face to face. The great Ṛṣis, Āḷvārs and Nāyanmārs sought God and saw Him face to face. The existence of God is proved by the experience of God. Śāstra is not opposed to science as its method of knowing God is scientific and it can be verified by personal experience. God is satya and amala, true and pure. Therefore, only the pure in heart who follow the sāttvik way can reach Him. Since the end is pure, the means also must be pure. Hinduism, therefore, insists on purity of conduct in thought, word and deed as the essential requisites for religious life. It is more a personal religion aiming at inner purity of life than on institutional loyalty and uniformity of faith.

No two persons are alike in temperament or station in life. Hinduism provides for every kind of adhikārin or aspirant and he is allowed to choose the path that is suited to his spiritual growth. A man may worship God in whatever form; He reveals Himself to him in that form.

But he should seek Him with a pure heart. Though Hinduism thus aims at unity in variety, it still follows an ancient tradition bequeathed from father to son and from guru to śiṣya and insists on satsaṅga. The āśrama is a spiritual community of the sādhūs and as satsaṅga it provides an inspiring social ideal.

The atmosphere of the temple in the centre of civic life is a perpetual reminder to the Hindu that God is in the centre of all his activities and is the real actor. The family, the vidyāśālā, the temple and the state offer facilities for mutual understanding and service. The family is the unit of social life spiritualised on the model of the Rāmāyaṇa. The temple affords every scope for the practice of the all-pervading presence of the Lord as Vāsudeva. Since rituals are only righteousness in details, they should be performed correctly in the interests of moral and spiritual discipline. Every righteous work is a worship of God; it is a dedication to Him in the spirit 'Not I, but Thou oh Lord' or Brahmārpaṇa. There is really no barrier or compartment between one person and the other as all are persons are spiritual entities in whose hearts God dwells as antaryāmin. A community of good souls or sātviks promotes the religious ideal of communion between God and man. Hinduism is known for its tolerance. Differences of opinion and even worship are tolerated. There is no compromise in the matter of conviction and purity of moral life. In addition to universality and tolerance, Hinduism is the only religion that recognises the immanence of Brahman in all jīvas as their antar-yāmin and the redemptive purpose of the avatāras, the similarity of all jīvas and the need for kainkarya and the salvability of all souls or jīvas. It promotes the spirit of propaganda and insists on religious education. But it is definitely opposed to the methods of coercion and proselytisation.

The spread of Hinduism by adapting it to modern needs without in any way giving up its essentials is its most urgent need today. This is achieved by the creation of proper teachers by affording them all facilities for the promotion of Hindu ideals. They should embody in their life all the ideals that they preach to others; religious education has no meaning if theory and practice do not coincide and if precept is not backed up by the purity of the personal conduct of the educators. The mutts in India may maintain their own tradition but they can pool their resources to fight irreligion and anti-Hindu influences from within and without. Tirumalai as the home of God and His eternal values offers the best social climate of physical and spiritual purity and may be the headquarters of this missionary effort.

APPENDIX

ILLUSTRATIVE STORIES.

CHAPTER I.

Matsyāvatāra
Yājñyavalkya
Bharadvāja
Tirukkaccinambi

Ekalavya
Kapota
Śibi
Hariścandra
Karna
Sāvitri

CHAPTER II.

Naciketas
Satyakāma Jābāli
Gods in the Kenopaniṣad
Bṛgu-Vāruṇi
Jānaśruti
Śvetaketu
Nārada
Yajñavalkya
Upakosala
Jaṭāyu
Sabari
Bali

Anasūyā
Rākṣasīs
Viśvāmitra
Agastya
Śarabhaṅga
Sītā
Kaikeyi
Rāvaṇa
Dilipa
Rukmāṅgada
Ambariṣa

CHAPTER III.

Indra and Virocana

CHAPTER VII.

Rāma
Bhīṣma
Lakṣmaṇa
Bharata
Uattaṅka

CHAPTER VIII.

Veṅkaṭāchala Māhātmya

CHAPTER IX.

Prahlāda
Gajendra
Dhruva
Mārkaṇḍeya
Vibīṣhaṇa
Kākāśura

INDEX

A		Bhūtas	32
Acit	26, 40	Brahmacarya	71 f.
Adharma	100	Brahman	4, 9, 11, 37, 38
Āgamas	2, 4, 53, 57 f.		39, 41, 45
Ahaṅkāra	18, 28	Brāhmaṇa	2, 47
Ālvars	2, 4	Brahmāṇḍas	24
Aṅgas	3	Brahmaloka	23
Antaḥkaraṇa	32	Brahmasūtras	5, 36
Antaryāmin	4, 10, 13 f.	Buddhi	18, 28, 32
Anumāna	6
Apūrva	34	C
Arcā	4, 10, 15 f, 83 f.	Caturvarga	64
Artha	99, 101	Cit	26
Āsana	33	Citta	18, 28
Āśramas	64 ff. 71 ff.	D
Āśramadharma	65 ff.	Darśana	6, 7
Atala	23	Darśanas	3, 30 ff.
Atharvaveda	2, 47	Dharma	2, 33, 34, 64 f. 99f.
Ātman	18 ff. 33	Dharmaśāstras	50
Ātmaḡuṇas	69 f.	Dharmasūtras	50 f.
Avatāra	4, 10, 14 f.	Dhyāna	33
Avidyā	20, 21	Divyaprabandha	59 ff.
B		E
Baddha	20	Expiatory ceremonies	87
Bhagavadgītā	36, 55	F
Bhagavān	9	Festivals	86
Bhāgavatapurāṇa	4	Freedom	24 f.
Bhakti	45
Bhaktiyoga	36, 91, 96 f.
Bhāvas	45

G		Karmendriyas	28
Gārhasṭhya	72 ff.	Kṣetras	88 f.
Gītā	5
God	9 ff.	M
		Mahābhārata	3, 36, 54 f.
H		Mahat	28, 32
Haviryajñas	67	Manas	18, 28
Hinduism	1, 8	Mantra	2, 47
		Manusmṛti	52
I		Miśrasattva	40
Images	86	Mokṣa	3, 5, 33, 35, 36, 39, 99, 102 ff.
Īśvara	4, 9, 10, 12, 26, 33, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 45	Mother	16 f.
Itihāsas	2, 3, 4, 53	Mukti	41, 43
		Muktiyogyas	42
J		Mūlaprakṛti	32
Jāgrat	19
Jīva	18 ff. 37, 39, 43	N
Jīvas	35, 38, 39	Naimittikakarmas	101
Jīvanmukta	38	Nāmāvalis	63
Jñāna	19	Nāyanmārs	2, 4
Jñānayoga	36, 91, 95 f.	Nirviṣeṣa	37
Jñānendriyas	28	Niṣedhas	78
		Niṣkāmakarma	92
K		Nityakarmas	101
Kaiṅkarya	102	Nityasaṃsārins	42
Kaivalya	32, 41	Niyama	33
Kalpasūtras	51	Nyāya	32, 33 f.
Kāma	21, 99, 101 f.	Nyāya Vaiśeṣika	5
Kāmyakarma	92, 101
Karma	21 f., 33, 34, 93 f.	P
Karmabhūmi	24	Pākayajñas	67
Karmayoga	36, 91, 92 f.	Pañcabhūtas	29

Pañcamahāyajñas	67, 74	Rāmāyaṇa	3, 54 f.
Pāñcarātra	85	Ṛgveda	2, 47
Pañcatanmātras	29	S
Para	10
Paramapada	40	Sādhanas	91 ff.
Parameśvara	43	Samādhi	33
Parāśarasmṛti	52	Sāmaveda	2, 47
Pariṇāma	39	Samhāra	12
Pāśa	26, 43	Samhitās	58
Pāśu	24, 36	Samśāra	21, 32, 33, 34, 38, 39, 40
Pātāla-loka	23	Samśkāras	66, 68
Pati	26, 43	Sanātana Dharma	1, 2
Pilgrimages	90	Sañcitakarma	25
Prakārin	40	Sāṅkhyā	32
Prakṛti	18, 26 ff., 32, 33	Sāṅkhyā-Yoga	5
Pralaya	12, 32	Sannyāsa	74 f.
Pramāṇas	5, 34	Sattva	29, 32
Prāṇas	18	Sattvaśūnya	40
Prāṇāyāma	33	Satyāloka	23
Prapattiyoga	36, 91, 97 f.	Sivajñānabodham	62
Prārabdhakarma	25	Smṛtis	2, 3, 4, 52
Pratyakṣa	6	Somayajñas	67
Pratyāhāra	33	Songs	63
Prāyaścittas	78	Sṛṣṭi	12, 32
Purāṇas	2, 4, 53, 56 f.	Sthiti	12
Puruṣa	26, 32, 33	Sthūlaśarīra	18, 28
Puruṣottama	9, 26	Stotras	62 f.
Pūrvamīmāṃsā	5, 32, 34	Sṛīdharmā	75 ff.
R		Suddhasattva	40
		Sūkṣmaśarīra	18, 28
Rajas	29, 32	Suṣupti	19
Rājadharma	111	Svapna	19
Rājayoga	91, 94 f.	Svarga	23

T

Tamas	29, 32
Tamoyogyas	42
Tanmātras	32
Tantras	53, 59
Temples	85
Tīrthas	89 f.
Tirumurais	61 f.
Transmigration	22 f.
Trivarga	64
Upādhis	39
Upaniṣad	2, 3, 5, 47
Upaniṣads	35, 49
Upapurāṇas	57
Utsavas	79 f.
Uttaramīmāṃsā	5, 32, 35
Uttaramīmāṃsāsūtra	50

V

Vaikhānasa	58
Vaiṣeṣika	32, 33
Vānaprastha	74
Varṇas	64 ff.
Varṇadharmas	65 ff.
Vedas	1, 2, 3, 4, 34, 35, 47 f.
Vedāṅgas	2
Vedānta	32, 35
Vices	70 f.
Viṣṇupurāṇa	4
Vratas	79

W

Womanhood	81 f.
Worship	83 ff.

Y

Yajurveda	2, 47
Yama	33
Yoga	32, 33

